Plane Crash Is a 'Puzzle,' Says Vidal; Fog a Factor

Bodies of 17 Victims Taken From Swamp; 11 Identified.

Motors Missing, Inquest Is Told

Curious Flock to Spot Where Ship Plowed Through Trees.

Copyright, 1936, by the Associated Press.

Goodwin, Ark., Jan. 15.—A theory that fog contributed to the crash of the air liner that killed 17 persons was advanced tonight, but Federal investigators described last night's disaster as a "puzzle."

Inhabitants of the area, a tangled morass in the Mississippi River low country, theorized that the ship might have encountered trouble, dropped into one of the pools of fog common in the region and crashed into the swampland trees trying to make an emergency landing.

Investigators for the Department of Commerce and the American Airlines, operators of the craft, went ahead with the inquiry, although Lake Littlejohn, Department of Commerce inspector, said "the cause probably will never be known."

Vidal Due Tomorrow.

Eugene L. Vidal, air commerce chief, ordered to head the inquiry, was expected here tomorrow. En route he described the disaster as a "puzzle" since the information in his hands indicated weather conditions were not responsible.

The complete break-up of the big luxury plane and the fact that none of its human cargo survived made the task of the investigators almost hopeless.

At Memphis, where the crushed bodies of the victims were moved with difficulty, 11 had been identified by their relatives and friends tonight.

The bodies were carried there by weary volunteer searchers who had worked since last night to remove them from the almost impenetrable spot where the twin-motored plane crashed and plowed through the trees for 400 yards.

"The 17 bodies are in," said Frank Thompson, Memphis funeral director, "but the relatives will have to identify their own dead. Even that is going to be difficult. In all my 40 years as an undertaker, I have never seen anything like it."

Harry L. Hopkins, WPA administrator, announced he and Col. Lawrence Westbrook, assistant administrator, would attend funeral services at Osceola, Ark., Friday for W. B. Dyess, Arkansas WPA head who was flying from Washington to Little Rock.

Identified Dead.

W. S. HARDWICK, 45, Beardstown, Ill., president of the Hardwick Construction Co.

ROBERT H. M'NAIR, 30, Little Rock, Ark., director of WPA finance and reports for Arkansas.

A. D. CHERNUS, 37, St. Louis, contractor with the Hardwick company.

CHARLES ALTSCHULL, 23, son of a wealthy New York family, a licensed pilot and advanced student of aviation at Glendale, Calif., where he was returning after the holidays.

MRS. SAMUEL HOROVITZ, about 38, her son, Seba, who had his fourth birthday Monday, and her mother-in-law, Mrs. B. Horovitz, all of Wakefield, Mass., flying to California on vacation.

MRS. J. S. GREMILLION, about 24, wife of the Knoxville, Tenn., manager of the American Airlines.

Federal Court Bans Operation Of Labor Law

Bay State Writ Granted in Home District of Connery, Co-Author of Act.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Jan. 15.—Temporary injunctions restraining the National Labor Relations Board from "interfering with the management" of two corporations were granted in Federal Court today in the first Massachusetts test of the Wagner-Connery labor law.

The two corporations, the Lion Shoe Co., of Lynn, and the A. C. Lawrence Leather Co., a Maine corporation with a plant at Peabody, Mass., had been cited before the board for alleged violations of the labor law.

Both plants are in the congressional district represented by William P. Connery, jr., of Lynn, co-author with Senator Robert F. Wagner, of New York, of the national labor act.

Restrains Enforcement.

The injunction would restrain the Labor Board from proceeding with the complaints, from enforcing the national labor act, from examining or attempting to examine the firm's books, from compelling them to produce their books and from interfering or attempting to interfere with the conduct of the firms' business or relations with employes.

Federal Judge Elisha H. Brewster granted the temporary injunction. Monday he will consider the question of making the order permanent.

In petitioning the Federal Court, counsel for the two companies contended constitutional property rights were violated by the Wagner-Connery act.

The complaint against the Lion Shoe Co. was brought by the United Shoe and Leather Workers' Union, which charges the company was fostering a company union, that employes had been required to join the Lynn Shoe Workers' Union, an alleged company-dominated organization. The complaint also charged the company's labor policy had resulted in restriction of interstate commerce. Labor difficulties at the plant, which normally employs 340 workers, have been long-standing.

Interstate Commerce Charged.

In denying the union's charges, counsel for the two companies contended they were engaged in intrastate and not interstate commerce, and therefore not subject to Federal regulation. They argued no interstate activity was involved in the actual manufacturing process. Interstate commerce in the raw materials involved in manufacturing, and in the finished product after manufacture, they argued, were entirely separate from the process of manufacture.

Japan Quits Naval Conference, Signaling Race on Armaments

United States, Britain, France and Italy, Firm in Refusal of Equality, Will Continue Conference; Davis Recites American Position.

By the Associated Press.

London, Jan. 15.—Japan walked out of the International Naval Conference tonight and 13 years of limitation of sea armaments went by the boards.

A naval race immediately loomed as a possibility, although all delegations, including the Japanese, said they wanted to avoid this costly competition.

Japan's move, reminiscent of her withdrawal in 1933 from the League of Nations over the Manchurian situation, was because the four other powers refused to grant her naval parity with the United States and Great Britain. It marked a further severance of her ties with the Western world.

Britain, the United States, France and Italy voted to continue tomorrow in an attempt to work out a limitation agreement without Japan.

Both the Washington and London naval treaties expire at the end of this year. Under the former, which Japan formally denounced a year ago, she is held on the short end of a 5—5—3 capital ship tonnage ratio with the two Anglo-Saxon powers.

Admiral Osami Nagano, head of the Japanese delegation, said Japan does not want to embark upon a naval race and was determined to cultivate assiduously the most friendly relations with other nations.

The British plainly labeled Tokyo's proposal "suicidal" to the British Empire in the present state of the world.

The withdrawal disclosed Britain and the United States solidly united in opposing the Japanese demands. Acting individually, they presented

Pittman Avers Civilian Deaths Put U. S. in War

Challenges Nye Stand That Trade Was Cause of Joining Allies.

By Felix Bruner.

Senator Pittman (Democrat), Nevada, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, yesterday took issue with the theory of the Nye munitions committee that commercial interests caused the World War.

"Damage to property in foreign commerce did not cause the entry of the United States into the war," he said. "It was caused by the deaths of innocent people. Even with our present neutrality law we would have gone into the war."

While the Nye committee continued to question J. P. Morgan and two of his partners, the Foreign Relations Committee was considering the question of freedom of the seas, amending the Administration neutrality bill to strengthen and clarify the position of this country in that respect.

The Nye committee continued its attack on the honesty and motives of Woodrow Wilson and concluded the day with the charge that J. P. Morgan & Co. had brought pressure, through threatened withdrawal of foreign orders during the war, to persuade the Federal Reserve Board to change its attitude in opposition to unsecured loans to the allies.

Former Rights Reserved.

The amendment to the neutrality bill retained the provision giving the President authority to proclaim that Americans' trade with belligerent countries be conducted at the shippers' own risk. At the same time, it tacked to this provision these words: "Provided, the United States reserves and reaffirms its rights under international law as it existed prior to August 1, 1914."

This same provision was in the original bill, but under the original wording the exception was made that these rights might be waived or modified.

The change, proposed by Chairman Pittman and approved by Secretary Hull, was construed as reserving the right of this country to protect its shipping if it saw fit. He said that the change was largely of a "clarifying" nature. Senator Borah, who insists the freedom of the seas must be preserved, saw the change as an important modification.

Borah contended that to the extent that the Government declares trade to be legitimate the Government is obligated to protect it.

"Protect, or Stop, Trade."

"Trade should either be protected or stopped altogether," he said.

Secretary Hull appeared yesterday before the Senate committee in executive session and will appear before the House Foreign Affairs Committee in closed session today. Chairman McReynolds of the House committee said he hoped to be able to report a neutrality bill Friday. The House committee yesterday heard Lathrop Stoddard, writer and lecturer, who argued that Italy and Ethiopia should be excluded from the provisions of the bill.

The Munitions Committee produced evidence to show that President Wilson was aware of secret agreements among the allies to divide the spoils of war shortly after he asked Congress to declare war. Later, a record of a Senate Foreign Relations Committee was produced to show that in 1919 Wilson had made the statement that the United States would have gone into the war even if Germany had committed no acts of aggression.

"It is evident that Wilson was fully apprised of the secret treaties and that he falsified in asserting he had no knowledge of them after the war," Nye said.

As most of the audience, which had thinned considerably, and some of the witnesses dozed in their chairs, Senator Clark developed the contention that Wilson was aware

AAA Employes Get Pay; 3,000 Lose Jobs Feb. 1

Salaries Made Possible by $3,000,000 Warrant Signed by McCarl.

Taking the bitter with the sweet, Washington's army of AAA employes drew their pay checks yesterday along with notices of dismissal or furlough.

Salary payments, in doubt up to the last minute despite two decisions Tuesday by Comptroller General McCarl, were made possible yesterday forenoon when he approved a warrant transferring $3,000,000 to the Treasury from the AAA administrative fund.

Treasury Group First.

This sum was adequate for the Treasury's 2,500 workers assigned to farm aid work, 800 here and 1,900 in the field, including the January 31 pay roll as well as yesterday's. Its own needs met, the department then utilized the precedent created by McCarl's action to release pay roll checks of some 6,600 Agricultural Adjustment Administration employes, all but 1,000 of whom are in the Capital.

Actual payment was made first to the Treasury group, quartered in the Internal Revenue Building. They were paid off in time to cash their checks at lunch time. Distribution was slower in the old Postoffice Department building and the south building of the Department

Grayson Arrest Now Near Test; Warrant Ready

Not to Be Moved if Too Ill, Declares Judge; Marshal Arrives.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Charlottesville, Va., Jan. 15.—Chief Deputy United States Marshal E. C. Garrard was on the University of Virginia campus tonight with a warrant for the arrest of John Cooke Grayson, former official of the Treasury Department, wanted in Washington to stand trial on charges in connection with the failure of the Park Savings Bank.

Grayson is ill in the university hospital and Garrard had instructions from Judge John Paul of the Federal Court at Roanoke, who issued the warrant, to "follow the usual instructions and not remove Grayson unless his condition warrants."

Garrard went to the Phi Beta Pi Fraternity House to spend the night with his son, a medical student at the university. He said he would confer tomorrow with Grayson's physician, Dr. J. Carroll Flippin.

William Leahy, attorney for Grayson, said he was "awaiting developments." It was assumed that he would vigorously oppose any attempt to remove his client from the hospital. Early this week in Washington Leahy produced physicians in the District Supreme Courtroom of Justice Daniel W. O'Donoghue who asserted that the trip to the Capital would kill Grayson.

The warrant for Grayson's arrest provides that he is to appear in Roanoke Monday "that he may be then and there dealt with according to law."

Judge Paul was reported in Roanoke to have cautioned Garrard "not to jeopardize a man's life."

Dr. Flippin today joined with Dr. J. Edwin Wood, who also had been attending Grayson, in stating that the defendant is in a critical condition and that it would be hazardous to attempt to remove him from the hospital.

The warrant for Grayson was issued by Judge Paul at the request of Daitrict Attorney Joseph H. Chitwood, of Roanoke. Attached to it was a bench warrant issued in Washington and signed by Franklin T. Mills, assistant clerk of the District of Columbia Supreme Court, and a copy of the indictment against Grayson.

The indictment charged Grayson with conspiring "to defraud the United States Government of its governmental function in the matter of the examination into the condition, and affairs of the bank." Grayson was employed in the office of the chief national bank examiner at the time, it was alleged.

Snowslide Buries 3 Train Cars; 11 of Trapped Passengers Hurt

By the Associated Press.

Colfax, Calif., Jan. 15.—A snowslide buried three coaches of the Southern Pacific's westbound transcontinental train, Pacific Limited, tonight near Donner Summit, in the high Sierra Mountains, and 11 passengers were reported injured.

Tons of snow, made heavy by recent rains, smashed through snow sheds protecting the track and engulfed the rear portion of the train as it was pulling into Eder Station, 40 miles northwest of here.

Railmen here received word the observation coach turned over. One man suffered a fracture of the arm, the Southern Pacific Co. reported.

Passengers in the observation car made their way through the buried coaches to the forward end of the three rear cars, leaving the other train. Trainmen uncoupled the coaches on the train, which started for Colfax.

The snowshed gave way along a 150-foot front, and the avalanche apparently spread as it rolled down on slowly moving train. Deep piles of snow and ice were deposited along the tracks for about 200 feet.

For days the area had been lashed by storms. The snow was about 6 feet deep at that elevation, approximately 7,000 feet. The scene of the avalanche is only a few miles from the place where 36 members of the historic Donner party perished from cold and hunger in their forlorn trek from the Middle West to California in 1846 and 1847.

'Bond' Bonus Wins Senate Right of Way

Overwhelming Passage This Week Forecast; President Silent.

Battle Over Amendment Proposals to Precede Final Ballot.

By Robert C. Albright.

Vague hints of a White House veto and clear indications of Treasury concern yesterday failed to check plans to call up the new coalition bond-payment bonus bill in the Senate today or tomorrow, and press it to probable overwhelming passage this week.

Preparing for a brief but noisy battle, the Senate Finance Committee filed a report on the measure yesterday, and made arrangements to waive pending Senate business to give the bonus right of way.

Outspoken in his opposition in past years, President Roosevelt was stoically silent as the issue neared the end of the Congressional road, giving rise to pro and con speculation on a veto. In one usually informed Administration quarter a bet was made that the President will not sign the revised bond payment measure.

Half a dozen fights to amend the bill before it goes to a Senate vote were brewing last night, ranging from left-wing efforts to pay off the bonus with an expanded currency issue, to rightist attempts to soften the Treasury blow by cammandeering unexpended relief balances.

Thomas Amendment.

Forecasting that substantially the bill drafted by the Senate Finance Committee will become law, Chairman Pat Harrison was not anticipating any great difficulty in pushing the measure to passage. It would then remain for the House either to accept the Senate changes or send its own cash-payment bill to conference with the Senate.

Informal polls indicated that more than the two-thirds Senate vote necessary to override a veto would appear on the final ballot. At least 65 Senators, including 48 Democrats, were said to be ready to vote "aye." Although this margin would be narrowed on an overriding vote, strength to carry the bonus to ultimate passage was claimed by its sponsors. House leaders said freely the chamber would override a veto.

Only one Senator expressed dogged determination to press his proposed amendments—Senator Elmer Thomas (Democrat), Oklahoma. He will offer alternative plans to pay the bonus either with new currency issued against free gold and silver in the Treasury, or through the Federal Reserve banks, which would be paid a nominal sum for financing a bonus bond issue.

Gore Amendment.

"It would be better to have currency expansion than bond expansion," Thomas said yesterday. "Secretary Morgenthau indicates we have embarked on a program of uncontrollable bond expansion."

Two other Senators said they were considering amendments but had not determined finally whether they will offer them today.

They were:

By Senator Thomas P. Gore (Democrat), Oklahoma:

To give the President discretionary power to use unexpended relief balances in cashing bonus bonds or certificates.

To eliminate provisions in the Senate bill "forgiving" some $363,000,000 in unpaid interest on bonus loans.

By Senator William H. King (Democrat), Utah.—

To pay off adjusted service certificates on their present cash surrender value, rather than their 1945 maturity value.

Meanwhile, a circular letter was dispatched to all Senators by Henry H. Curran, director of the National Economy League, urging them to vote against what he called the "dangerous and unprincipled" Senate bill.

He again sounded a warning that the moment veterans bonus legislation is out of the way, organized veterans will drive for an even more costly program of service pensions.

"This bonus hand-out is going to destroy any chance for the confidence in the finances of our National Government that is necessary if we are ever to regain our former national prosperity," Curran said.

"Our national budget is unbal-

Gov. Hoffman Evades Questions on Reprieve

Trenton, N. J., Jan. 15 (AP).—Gov. Harold G. Hoffman, possessing a disputed power of reprieve for Bruno Richard Hauptmann for not more than 90 days, today answered a series of questions put to him through his press aid, William Conklin. They were:

1—Q. Are you going to reprieve Hauptmann?—A. I have made no decision.

2—Q. Would you feel it mandatory upon you to stay the execution should proceedings be pending in the courts the day of the execution?—A. Not necessarily, unless orders should issue from the court.

3—Q. Will there be an announcement today on whether to grant the reprieve?—A. When an announcement is made it will be made to the newspapermen at the Statehouse.

4—Q. Are you continuing your independent study of the case?—A. Yes.

5—Q. Would you grant a reprieve in the event Hauptmann should confess?—A. No answer.

Edith Maxwell Evidence Stirs Doubt in Judge

Court Intimates Findings Post Attorney Presented Impressed Him.

By Virginia Lee Warren.

A Staff Correspondent.

Wise, Va., Jan. 15.—The fate of Edith Maxwell, 21-year-old mountain school teacher, rested tonight in the hands of Circuit Judge H. A. W. Skeen, who today intimated that he entertained doubts that the blows inflicted with a slipper by Edith could have caused the death of her father, Trigg Maxwell.

The 76-year-old justice today overruled all arguments of counsel for a new trial, except those advanced by Charles Henry Smith, who has been retained by The Post to see that justice is done to the girl.

MacDonald Affidavit.

As to Smith's contentions, which were based on newly-discovered evidence which purports to show Maxwell may have died from causes other than the slipper blows, the court reserved judgment until tomorrow.

After Smith concluded his argument, Judge Skeen took the unusual course of ordering the prosecuting attorneys to recall for questioning tomorrow Drs. T. J. Tudor and Glenn T. Foust, who testified for the Commonwealth at the trial, which resulted in Edith's conviction and her subsequent sentence of 25 years in State's prison.

By means of a skillful tactical maneuver, Smith has thrown the Commonwealth into a position of having to prove that Maxwell's death did, in fact, result from injuries inflicted by Edith and not from other causes.

"External Force Absent."

Although the defense attorneys are not overly optimistic a new trial will be granted on these grounds, they have been heartened by the fact that they have engendered doubts in the mind of Judge Skeen as to the actual cause of death.

It was an affidavit obtained by a Post reporter from Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, coroner of the District of Columbia, which seemed to have impressed Judge Skeen.

"After a thorough and complete study of the autopsy findings of Trigg Maxwell, I have come to the conclusion that his death was not caused by the application of external force," said Dr. MacDonald in his affidavit.

Even though Judge Skeen might overrule the request for a new trial on the grounds advanced by Smith, the defense attorneys feel they have assembled enough evidence to warrant a reversal of the judge's ruling in the event the case is taken to a higher court.

"This is the most encouragement that we have had in months," said the dark-haired school teacher after Judge Skeen had ordered the recall of the witnesses.

Blood clots found in the sinuses of Maxwell by the two Commonwealth physicians might have been caused indirectly by the process of

60,000 Subway Riders in Dark As Manhattan Lights Go Out

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 15.—Virtually all of New York north of mid-Manhattan was plunged into darkness late today when one of its great electric nerve centers was temporarily paralyzed by an explosive short circuit.

Subway trains came to a halt, lights flickered and went out, radios sputtered and became silent, industrial power plants ceased their steady throbbing, clocks stopped and even elevators came to rest at emergency stops.

Police reserves were hurried into the affected area to prevent looting and disorder. Hospitals switched to emergency power plants. The National Broadcasting Co. did likewise.

The tie-up came at 4:10 p. m. as the rapid winter twilight was falling, and continued for nearly three-quarters of an hour. Even then it was some time before the vast network of communication and power lines served by the distributing plant was unsnarled.

Thousands of home-bound office workers pouring into subway kiosks of the new Independent line were forced to jam their way out again and seek other transport lines. Approximately 300 cars were halted on the line north of Columbus circle. Officials estimated that 60,000 passengers were caught underground by the sudden power stoppage. Guided by lights powered by emergency batteries they made their way across dead third rails to the nearest exits.

Telephone switchboards bogged down under a flood of calls from persons seeking to learn the cause of the trouble. There was a sudden demand for candles and stores soon reported their supplies had been exhausted.

The short circuit occurred in the Hell Gate station of the United Electric Light & Power Co. Police said it caused an explosion that blew out all the windows on one side of the top floor.

Hauptmann's Pleas Slated Today Before High Court

Dodds and Burkinshaw Return to Capital to Present Motions.

Hoffman Reported Holding Confession

Officials Confer Secretly in N. Y. and Promise Statement Today.

A motion asking leave to file an original petition for a writ of habeas corpus and an application for a stay of sentence pending action on the motion will be filed in Supreme Court today in an eleventh-hour attempt to save Bruno Richard Hauptmann from the electric chair.

Although Neil Burkinshaw and Nugent Dodds, Washington attorneys retained in Hauptmann's defense, said they could make no statement about their plans, it was determined from another source that this was the only course left open.

The Supreme Court opens officially at noon, but pleas and motions may be filed earlier. When the motion and application for stay are filed, it is expected that the clerk of the court will take them to Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes immediately.

Three Decisions Possible.

The possible actions of the court are:

1. Refusal of the court to consider the motion, which means the end of Hauptmann's last chance in the courts of escaping the death penalty tomorrow for the murder of the kidnaped Lindbergh child.

2. Granting of the stay of execution with the promise to consider the motion for leave to file the original petition for a writ of habeas corpus.

3. Granting of both the stay of execution and the motion.

If the motion is granted and the court then decides to consider the writ of habeas corpus, according to legal experts, it would then take original jurisdiction of the case and study it to determine if Hauptmann's constitutional rights have been infringed.

Review Already Refused.

The Supreme Court already has refused to review the conviction of Hauptmann, but it was believed that the habeas corpus action might enable the securing of a stay or execution.

Burkinshaw and Dodds arrived in Washington just a few minutes before the Supreme Court closed at 4:30 p. m. yesterday. To reporters who met them, Burkinshaw said:

"The chief counsel in this case are in New Jersey. I cannot make any statement at this time."

Confession Reported.

Trenton, N. J., Jan. 15.—A report emanating tonight from a high source, but wholly lacking in official confirmatoin, said Gov. Harold G. Hoffman had in his possession a purported written confession from a new figure in the Lindbergh baby slaying.

Neither Gov. Hoffman nor his press aid could be reached, but this source said the Governor had made overtures to the leading officials who participated in the capture of Bruno Richard Hauptmann—sentenced to be electrocuted Friday night—to serve in an advisory capacity to study the value of the purported confession.

If these advisers consider the "confession" of value, it is said, the Governor will stay the execution until a thorough investigation can be made. The nature of the "confession" has not been indicated and the name of the person involved is not known.

"Break" Believed Near.

A secret conference in New York late today between Federal, New Jersey and New York officials added to the tense feeling here that a sensational "break" was imminent. The conference was attended by Col. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, head of the New Jersey State Police; J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Division of Investigation of the United States Department of Justice, and Lewis J. Valentine, police commissioner of New York City. They met in the office of Mayor F. H. LaGuardia.

After the conference it was said no announcement would be made until tomorrow afternoon, when another meeting will be held. None of those participating in the conference would talk.

Gov. Hoffman, who made a nocturnal visit to Hauptmann in his cell recently, was absent from the

G.O.P. Leaders' Are Increased Organizations

Borah, Landon and Knox Battle for Support; Hoover Silent.

By the Associated Press.

Increased organization on behalf of Borah, Landon and Knox for the Republican Presidential nomination became apparent yesterday.

Whatever hopes the party leadership held for confining pre-convention discussions to issues diminished accordingly.

Of the "big five" mentioned most frequently to lead against the New Deal, former President Hoover and Senator Vandenberg, of Michigan, remained in the position of silence on their political plans.

Senator Borah, of Idaho, added Minnesota to New York, Wisconsin, Ohio and Illinois as the States in which friends will seek delegates pledged to him. Pennsylvania is tentatively listed.

Landon Club Formed.

The first club in New York for Gov. Landon of Kansas was projected by Albert Ottinger, vanquished by President Roosevelt for the governorship in 1928. In New York he quoted the Kansan as saying in a recent conference with him:

"If the people want me for President, I am not afraid to tackle the job."

Landons' attitude has been that his governorship duties come first, the issues making this "no time for personalities and personal ambitions."

Topeka headquarters for handling mail about Landon's availability were set up by Charles F. Scott, director of G. O. P. publicity in 1912 and 1932.

New Hampshire newspapers received copious publicity material on Col. Frank Knox, of Chicago, from the Knox-for-President committee there. This was but a beginning.

Hoover Speech Awaited.

The Hoover speech at Lincoln, Nebr., tonight was awaited in the Capital for any prospect of more active participation in the forthcoming primary contests. He is generally believed to be opposed to Borah.

New Hampshire and Illinois organization leaders have declared for Knox. At Detroit yesterday, he invited support from Michigan also in case Vandenberg "persists in his present attitude that he is not a candidate."

Despite absence of any hint of a change from Vandenberg, some of his friends here evidently look for him to "open up" sooner or later.

"Free-for-All" Foreseen.

The developing situation has aroused speculation whether the New York primary will become a "free-for-all." The Old Guard favors an unpledged delegation against Borah's counter maneuver. Ottinger said there had been no decision on the position of Landon's friends.

Announcing Borah's Minnesota decision, Representative Knutson, of that State, said he would start work there within 30 days.

The campaign battleground will be in the West, he said, describing the Idahoan as "neither ultra-conservative nor ultra-radical" and having the needed appeal to win.

In the House, Representative Fish (Republican), New York, hailed objections to Borah by President Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia University as assuring "another 1,000,000 votes" for him. He praised Borah's voting record, only to be asked by Representative Bankhead (Democrat), Alabama, about the AAA.

"Well," came the reply amidst laughter, "Borah voted for it and I voted against it, but we won't argue on that."

10,000 to Hear Hoover.

By the Associated Press

Lincoln, Nebr., Jan. 15.—Lyle Jackson, of Neligh, chairman of the Nebraska Republican Central Committee, predicted tonight more than 10,000 persons will hear former President Hoover discuss President Roosevelt's farm policies here tomorrow night.

Hoover will deliver the fourth in his announced series of five attacks on the Rooseveltian New Deal at 8:30 p. m., Central standard time, tomorrow at the University of Nebraska coliseum.

Nebraska's Democratic Governor, R. L. Cochran, ardent supporter of Roosevelt, said the "press of official duties" probably would prevent him from hearing the former President's address.

Another State Democratic leader, Mayor Charles W. Bryan, of Lincoln, thrice Governor and Democratic Vice Presidential nominee in 1924, said he and Mrs. Bryan would be in the audience.

Pleased by Reaction.

Chicago, Jan. 15 (AP).—Pleased, they said, with the public reaction to their first dramatized political program, Republican leaders today completed plans for three more anti-New Deal broadcasts of the same type.

Thomas G. Sabin, director of the Republican national committee's radio division, discounted reports of "deliberate interference" with the program from Radio Station WGN last night, but said he would be alert to that possibility in the future.

The next three episodes in the sequence, entitled "Liberty at the Cross-Roads" and designed to "show the effects of New Deal policies on average Americans," are scheduled for the same outlet on the next three Tuesday nights. They were banned by the two major chains over G. O. P. chieftains' protests of "censorship."

Sabin said difficulties encountered in the first five minutes of last night's broadcast were caused by the loss of sensitivity in a needle used in the electric transpcription.

French Flier Will Try Paris-N.Y. Round Trip

Paris, Jan. 15 (AP).—Close friends of the French aviator, Capt. Maurice Rossi, said today he would attempt a flight to Paris and New York and return within a few months, hoping to shatter the world's long-distance airplane record he set with Paul Codos from New York to Syria.

The flier will begin rigorous tests tomorrow of a new, twin-motored, single-seated monoplane at Villacoublay. The craft is capable of 234 miles an hour, and has a cruising range of 4,700 miles.

President to Sign Bonus, Is Whisper on Capitol Hill; His Past Record on Issue Cited.

WHISPERS are again heard on Capitol Hill that President Roosevelt will sign the pending bonus bill. The President's silence on the subject and the eagerness with which his leaders in Congress have rushed to support this measure have encouraged the whispers, which are beginning to become audible.

So was it whispered last spring that President Roosevelt would sign the Patman bonus bill. But not only did Mr. Roosevelt veto the Patman measure, but to emphasize his disapproval he personally delivered to Congress a veto message of scathingly sharp and forthright language, the first time any President delivered in person a veto message.

If the reports that Mr. Roosevelt would accept the pending bonus bill did not originate with men who profess to be his friends and supporters, they might be put down as efforts of his political foes to impeach his sincerity and portray him as a man who turns his back on principles for expediency in a campaign year.

Whatever may be said about the inconsistencies of Franklin D. Roosevelt and about his broken promises, he has a straight and clean record on the bonus issue. He has met that issue from the day he became a serious candidate for the Presidency until the present in a forthright manner and without gloves. Can it be believed that he now will waver? Even if he desired to do so, how could he justify such an about-face?

Mr. Roosevelt's earliest known pronouncement on the bonus was made in an interview in April, 1932, when he said:

"I do not see how, as a matter of practical business sense, a government running $2,000,000,000 behind annually can consider the anticipation of bonus payment until it has a balanced budget, not only on paper, but with a surplus of cash in the Treasury."

Mr. Roosevelt reiterated that statement in a campaign address at Pittsburgh, October 20, 1932, and added:

"No one, for political purpose or otherwise, has the right in the absence of explicit statement from me to assume that my views have changed. They have not."

In an informal note signed "F. D. R." to the late Speaker Henry T. Rainey, on February 27, 1934, Mr. Roosevelt wrote:

"Mac (Marvin McIntyre, secretary to the President) has shown me your letter of February 21. Naturally when I suggested to you that I could not approve the bill for the payment of the bonus certificates I did not mean that I might let it become law without my signature. I don't do business that way. What I meant was, I would veto the bill, and I don't care who you tell this to."

In a letter, December 31, 1934, to Commander Garland A. Farmer of the American Legion Post at Henderson, Tex., citing his objections to immediate payment of the bonus, Mr. Roosevelt wrote:

"The amount which is printed upon the face of every adjusted service certificate is not the amount of the basic or original bonus voted by Congress, but is an amount plus 25 per cent added for deferred payment which, with interest at 4 per cent compounded annually over a 20-year period, will produce the face or maturity value. This would seem to dispose of the question as to whether the obligation is immediately due. . . . Those who advocate the payment of these certificates at this time for the purpose of stimulating business certainly cannot have given the interests of the veterans much thought."

Vetoing the Patman bonus bill, May 22, 1935, the President, after citing objections to the currency inflation aspects of the measure, said:

"Today the credit of the United States is safe. But it cannot ultimately be safe if we engage in a policy of yielding to each and all of the groups that are able to enforce upon the Congress claims for special consideration. To do so is to abandon the principle of government by and for the American people and to put in its place government by and for the minorities . . . I do not need to be a prophet to assert that if these certificates, due in 1945, are paid in full today, every candidate for election to the Senate or House of Representatives will in the near future be called upon in the name of patriotism to support general pension legislation for all veterans, regardless of need or age . . . The complete failure of Congress to provide additional taxes for an additional expenditure of this magnitude would in itself and by itself alone warrant disapproval of this measure."

Probably no President has a more consistent, forthright record on any issue than Mr. Roosevelt has on the bonus, as the foregoing demonstrates. Some Republicans may feel it would be a glaring inconsistency on his part not to switch his position, as he has, they claim, on most questions.

of the secret treaties. He read from Lord Balfour's published diaries an account of a dinner at the White House before the United States entered the war, in which he said:

"I think the question of secret treaties was raised by the President after we had left the dinner table. There were no secrets between us then or afterward on any of the many subjects that came up for discussion."

Clark then read from published recollections of David Lloyd George, in which the British statesman wrote:

"Balfour described in detail these agreements and offered repeatedly to supply copies of the treaties to the President, but he was obviously anxious not to be informed in writing of the details as he did not wish to be embarrassed by being 'affected with notice.'"

Committee members said they had information that during the visit of the British mission Balfour and Sir Eric Drummond spent a day with Secretary Lansing at which time the group went over the secret treaty situation. Clark said that later Balfour left a long memorandum at the State Department outlining the treaties. The committee did not make the memorandum public.

Later, the committee contended, when the Versailles Treaty was up for consideration, both President Wilson and Secretary of State Lansing contended their first knowledge of the treaties was obtained during the peace conference in Paris.

One part of the committee record read:

"Senator Borah: When did the secret treaties between Great Britain, France and other nations of Europe with reference to certain adjustments in Europe come to your knowledge? Was that after you had reached Paris, also?

Disclosed on Paris Trip.

"President Wilson: Yes, the whole series of understandings was disclosed to me for the first time then.

"Senator Borah: Then we had no knowledge of these secret treaties, so far as our Government was concerned, until you reached Paris?

"President Wilson: Not unless there was information at the State Department, of which I knew nothing."

Senator Johnson, according to the committee record, asked Lansing:

"Did either of these gentlemen (Balfour or Viviani, the latter representing France) while here communicate to you any secret treaties that had been executed for disposition of territory after the war?"

"Neither of them," replied Lansing.

The committee also put into the record a previously published cablegram from Ambassador Page, dated March 4, 1917, a month before the declaration of war. It said:

"Perhaps our going into the war is the only way in which our present prominent trade position can be maintained and a panic averted. The submarine has added the last item to the danger of a financial world crash. During a period of uncertainty about our being drawn into the war, no more considerable credit can be privately placed in the United States and a collapse may come in the meantime."

Warned on Foreign Loans.

Getting back to the foreign credit situation, the committee produced a statement of the Federal Reserve Board, dated November 16, 1916, in which the board said that it deemed it its duty "to caution the member banks that it does not regard it in the interest of the country at this time to invest in foreign treasury bills."

The reference was to a series of unsecured allied loans.

The next day J. P. Morgan cabled his London office:

"Every effort, as you must realize, will be made by us and our associates by educational processes to counteract throughout the country a statement just issued, but we have got to begin at the bottom of the hill once more and it will be a long, slow process with very much depending upon future attitude of our authorities.

"Meanwhile we can see no way except for your authorities to consider ways and means for immediate curtailment of purchases, letting such action be announced without rancor, but explicitly, with possible good effect upon American attitude."

The latter statement was construed by committee members as a threat to pursuade the board to change its attitude on penalty of curtailment of American trade with the allies.

Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, insisted that if the committee should look at the record objectively "and to learn a lesson from what happened instead of trying to pin responsibility upon someone, we would get further."

"Draw Conclusion You Like."

Referring to the Morgan cable, Clark asked:

"Doesn't that mean you were using curtailment of purchases to arouse public sentiment for a change in the Reserve Board ruling?"

"You can draw any conclusion you like," Thomas W. Lamont, Morgan partner, replied. "We wish to state that we had no such elaborate lucubration in our minds."

4 Senators Air Views to Back Anti-War Pact

Speak on Kellogg-Briand Treaty Over National Radio Hookup.

Four United States Senators last night spoke on ways of making the Kellogg-Briand pact effective. The talks were over a Nation-wide radio hookup.

Senator Capper (Republican), Kansas, referred to a recent poll conducted by his publications in which, he said, the nearly 100,000 persons who participated "not only expressed their hatred of war, but also voted by overwhelming majorities for seven different steps in keeping the United States out of foreign wars."

Treaty Inspires Co-operation.

Senator Costigan (Democrat), Colorado, referring to the treaty, said it "was and is well designed to fire the world's imagination and inspires its co-operation in letter and spirit for peace and civilization."

Senator Pope (Democrat), of Idaho, referred to the pact as a system of collective security under which "we would co-operate with other world powers to enforce peace."

Senator Nye (Republican), of North Dakota, asked: "If we are really in good faith in our participation in the Kellogg-Briand pact, why is the world of participants in this pact so madly bent on the present armament race?"

The broadcast was under the auspices of the Peoples Mandate Committee. Mrs. Raymond Clapper interviewed the Senators.

Actual Neutrality Impossible.

In a speech earlier in the day before the Washington Society of Engineers, Senator Pope said that "neutrality in fact" is an impossibility.

"Many people reach the hasty conclusion that by merely passing a bill Congress can make the United States neutral and immune from war," he said. "As a matter of fact, neutrality, like morals and temperance, is something that can not be supplied by legislation."

"The United States," he said, "will be safer with a policy of neutrality, but it will not be safe. We will be safe only when a system of law and order is established in the world and wars are prevented from starting by an effective organization of collective security."

Civil Engineers Elect Mead New President

New York, Jan. 15 (AP).—Daniel Webster Mead, Madison, Wis., power and hydraulic engineer, was elected president of the American Society of Civil Engineers today at the eighty-third annual meeting.

A special committee recommended that the Federal works program be directed by a permanent nonpartisan body of "Supreme Court caliber." Condemnation of the use of "yardsticks" for public utility plants, as "unnecessary, expensive and unjustified," was expressed by the report.

Element Goes to Pieces Taking its Own Picture

Chicago, Jan. 15 (AP).—The pinpoint of precious metallic protoactinium, nature's second heaviest element, was gone tonight.

It disintegrated while its creator, Dr. Aristid Von Grosse, of the University of Chicago, tried to take its picture by the light of its own radioactive rays.

Dr. Von Grosse extracted a milligram (a 2800th part of an ounce) of the metal from the residue of radium's activity, in 1934. The scientist vowed tonight he would bring his brainchild back into the world on perhaps a somewhat bigger pinpoint.

Newest British Liner May Bring Fare Fight

Glasgow, Scotland, Jan. 15 (AP).—Reports that completion of Britain's new transatlantic liner, the Queen Mary, may lead to sharp rivalry in reduced passenger fares were strengthened today during an inspection of the ship by newspapermen.

The correspondents found extraordinary tourist accommodations, equal or superior to the first-class of many other ships.

If trials of the Queen Mary are successful, officials said, a sister ship may be built to "balance the schedule" of the Queen Mary.

Expenditures Of Nation Pass 4 Billion Mark

Almost Half of Sum Is Deficit; Treasury Receipts Increase.

By the Associated Press.

Government expenditures surged over the $4,000,000,000 mark yesterday, with almost half of it a deficit.

A Treasury statement, dated Monday, showed $4,011,000,000 had been expended in the present fiscal year through that date, while the deficit had mounted to $1,996,000,000. The total estimated expenditure for the year is $7,045,000,000 and the forecast deficit, $3,234,000,000.

The Treasury had receipts of $2,013,000,000 through January 13, which were $47,000,000 greater than last year despite the lag in processing taxes, which were running $235,000,000 behind those of the fiscal year 1935. This source of revenue has produced only $89,000,000 since July 1 as a result of court injunctions which permitted processors to impound this levy pending the Supreme Court's recent ruling against the AAA.

Receipts from income taxes tallied $563,000,000 up to January 13, a figure $138,000,000 greater than last year. Miscellaneous internal revenue, with receipts of $1,048,000,000, is $134,000,000 ahead of last year.

Emergency expenses thus far have amounted to $1,776,000,000, which is $147,000,000 less than spent during the comparable period last year. Ordinary expenditures, however, are $396,000,000 greater than last year, $2,235,000,000 as of January 13.

Senate to Take Up Leave Bills Today

The two Government leave bills, several other measures affecting Federal employes and some District legislation are on the Senate calendar to be taken up today under the unanimous consent rule.

Indications are, however, that the bills to provide 30-day vacation periods and 15-day cumulative sick leaves will be returned to the Senate Civil Service Committee for further study because of the objections of several Senators, notably McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee.

The Logan bill to place all jobs in the executive branch of the Government under civil service also is on the calendar, but it faces too much opposition ever to get by under unanimous consent.

District legislation includes the small loans bill, several times objected to; a measure to establish a new boiler inspection division in the District government, and a bill to authorize District officials to deny driving rights to nonresidents who are convicted of violating local traffic regulations for which similar penalties are imposed in Washington.

Kipling Slightly Better, Says Hospital Bulletin

London, Jan. 15 (AP).—A hospital bulletin shortly before midnight tonight announced that Rudyard Kipling, who underwent an emergency operation Monday for a perforated stomach ulcer, was "maintaining his slight improvement."

The condition of the noted author turned for the better today after a night-long bedside vigil by his attending surgeon, Dr. A. E. Webb-Johnson.

$5,000 Claimed for Dog.

Los Angele, Jan. 15 (AP).—Gertrude Michael of the films wants $5,000 because a street car killed her pet dachshund, Johannesburg. The actress filed suit today against the Pacific Electric Co., citing loss of affection caused by the dog's death, damages for medical expense and care of the dachshund and loss of pedigree.

Hitler Warns Germany Against Losing 'Nerve'.

Detmold, Germany, Jan. 15 (AP).—Reichsfuehrer Hitler, addressing a mass meeting here tonight, prepared the German people for possible further sacrifices. The meeting was in commemoration of the political campaign in the Province of Lippe, January, 1933, which gave impetus to Hitler's seizure of power.

Senate Speeds 'Bond' Bonus

anced, our national debt is greater than it ever was before, our national credit is slipping into a position of danger, our taxes are increasing, and, as inflation comes nearer, the purchasing power of our dollar is falling.

"This is no time to hand out $2,000,000,000 not due until nine years from now. By anticipating the due date we make the transaction cost in the end nearly a billion dollars more than it would otherwise cost. And we know full well that a baby bond or any other kind of a bond means money borrowed, debt increased and national insolvency beckoned to even more cordially than it already has been."

Curran said he favored "generous care" of veterans hurt by actual war service, and dependents of those who died from war injuries, but opposed payments to the healthy and able-bodied, "very few of whom were never under fire or anywhere near the front."

Outright opposition to the bonus measure also was reiterated yesterday by Senators Peter G. Gerry, of Rhode Island, and Harry F. Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, but they said they had no amendments in mind.

The two amendments under consideration by Senator Gore were offered at Tuesday's Finance Committee meeting and defeated. Senator King said the amendment he is considering would save the Treasury $1,000,000,000.

Uncertainty as to whether the measure will be considered today or tomorrow was injected last night, when Senate Minority Leader Charles L. McNary indicated he may ask that it go over a day.

Where the bill approved last week by the House authorizes immediate full payment in cash, the revised Senate measure would provide for a pay-off in non-negotiable bonds, which could be held until 1945 for interest accumulations, or redeemed at face value, at each veteran's option. Bonds would be issued in multiples of $50, with the odd balances paid in cash.

Alienist Calls Cripple Insane In Child Death

Physician Says Ashcraft Planned to Kill Self, Too.

While David Ashcraft listened from his wheelchair, an alienist came to Justice Daniel O'Donoghue's criminal court yesterday and offered the first medical testimony that the crippled news vendor, on trial for the murder of his 5-year-old son last September 12, is insane.

The physician, Dr. Roger S. Cohen, formerly of the staff of St. Elizabeths Hospital, but now in private practice, asserted Ashcraft had the mentality of a child of 10 years when he examined him on three occasions after the crime.

Ashcraft is suffering from a rather rare malady called Friedreich's ataxia, Dr. Cohen told the jury of 12 men who will judge the man who is reported to have killed his son over a gas jet at 227 Third street last autumn.

The disease first appears in early childhood, and it progresses through youth, driving sufferers from crutches to wheelchairs, and eventually to their beds.

Muscles and tendons wither and almost disappear. The spinal-cord column is affected, Dr. Cohen asserted, and then the brain.

It was from this disease, Dr. Cohen told the jury, that Ashcraft suffered from childhood.

In 1927 he came to Washington and sold papers. He met the woman, Josephine, whom he married. Later little David was born.

Dr. Cohen then repeated much of the testimony about Ashcart's domestic life that other witnesses related on the two previous days of the trial.

"I asked him why he killed David," Dr. Cohen recalled.

"He planned to take his own life. He told me he loved David, and could not think of dying and leaving his son with a woman who did not love him."

When Dr. Cohen described the intelligence tests he gave Ashcraft, the prisoner knitted his brows and appeared to be trying to pass them all over again with better marks.

Do you think the defendant is insane today?" Assistant United States Attorney Samuel Beach asked Dr. Cohen during cross-examination.

"I wouldn't like to say," replied Dr. Cohen. "I have not examined him today."

"Would you say, then," countered Beach, "that a man can be insane one day and sane the next?"

"No, I don't want you to infer that insanity is something that happens so suddenly," the physician answered.

How Ashcraft was known as "Happy Days" back in 1928, when he sold his papers at Fourteenth and G streets, was described by William J. Dunn, branch manager for the Western Union telegraph station there.

"He always was smiling. We boys at the office patronized him," Dunn remembered.

"He called me Bill and I called him Dave. Sometimes I bought him coffee and cigarettes. But last year all this changed. He stared into space and would scarcely talk.

"He became absolutely melancholy. If you took his hand, it was limp as a fish. I don't think he was, in my opinion, of sound mind last year."

Hauptmann Called Victim of Torture

Berlin, Jan. 15 (AP).—German newspapers attacked the "torture" of Bruno Richard Hauptmann today and lauded the German method of execution "with the ax."

In discussing the case, the Voelkischer Beodbachter said Hauptmann, a native of this country, was convicted on "circumstantial evidence," and it would be "inexcusable to place Hauptmann in the electric chair."

Der Angriff, organ of Dr. Paul Joseph Goebbels, said the whole principle of German punishment in such cases is, "quick, and above all, certain death without any torture."

Pointing out that nearly a year had passed since Hauptmann was condemned, it said yet "the murderer of the Lindbergh child walks back and forth in his cell.

"One must imagine the passage of hours with such a man waiting for death, to grasp admiringly the full measure of American humanity and compare it with German barbarism—a barbarism which not only executes with the ax but quickly."

Bee Brings Death.

Salisbury, Mo., Jan. 15 (AP).—Albert C. McMahan, 39, struck at a bee on his arm. Instead, he hit an ax blade. An infection developed and caused his death.

Grandmother Braves Flames To Rescue Son and 3 Children

Groping blindly, through dense smoke, Mrs. Sarah Powell, a 52-year-old grandmother, saved her grown son and three children early yesterday when fire completely destroyed her home, and injured her and a fireman at 4217 Canal road northwest.

Aroused from sleep by smoke, Mrs. Powell pushed her grandson, Daniel Powell, 4, and two cousins, Marie Bittner, 15, and Sally Bittner, 10, from a second-floor front room window onto a porch roof.

Leaving them there, the woman ran back into the house and felt her way into a rear bedroom and aroused her son, Earl, 22. She led him through flame and smoke to the roof where he assisted the children and the grandmother to the ground and safety.

Mrs. Powell received a cut on her right arm while helping her son from the burning house.

Fire Department Lieut. John R. Moore, No. 23 Engine Company, suffered a crushed foot when he slipped under the wheels of a hose wagon as the apparatus arrived on the scene. He was taken to Georgetown Hospital where one of his toes was amputated.

Daniel Powell, another son, awakened by the flames, had ran in his underwear to turn in the alarm. He had rescued his wife, Alice, 28, and their two children, Paula Ann, 15 months, and Agnes, 3, and saw that the others were in a position to flee before he left the house.

The fire, which broke out about 3 a. m., apparently started in the kitchen. The family lost everything but the clothing they wore. Damage was estimated at about $5,000, partly covered by insurance.

Mrs. Powell, a widow, has been living in the house more than 24 years. It was built at that time from lumber from the old Arlington Hotel, when it was demolished.

Doctors Claim New Diabetes Remedy

Chicago, Jan. 15.—A new treatment for diabetes—a heretofore unknown compound of insulin—was announced today in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

A scientific contribution from the fish family, the new medicine was described by its four Danish creators as more comparable to the anti-diabetic action of nature than is the old insulin treatment.

The compound's effectiveness is twice as prolonged as the present treatment, and requires smaller doses in many cases, the Danish scientists declared.

The new medicine was named protamine insulinate by the men who developed it: Dr. H. C. Hagendorn, Dr. B. Norman Jensen, Dr. N. B. Krarup and Dr. I. Wodstrup, all of Copenhagen, Denmark.

The four used it successfully at the famed steno memorial hospital in Copenhagen. Their findings were confirmed at the New England Deaconess Hospital in Boston, Mass., by Dr. Howard F. Root, Dr. Priscilla White, Dr. Alexander Marble and Dr. Elmer H. Stotz, the Journal said.

7 Killed as Plane Falls in Colombia

Bogota, Colombia, Jan. 15 (AP).—Seven persons, including three crew men, were killed when a trimotored army plane crashed yesterday between Puerto Bay and Tesesquinas, belated reports from Caqueta Intendancy said tonight.

The other seven persons aboard the craft were said to have been seriously injured.

The seven reported killed included the pilot, co-pilot, radio operator, one of two Sisters of Charity aboard the ship, Maj. Uscategui, head of the Letician army garrison, and two others.

It stopped briefly at Puerto Boy, a military post on the Caqueta River 150 miles south of Bogota, at 2 p. m.

Army airplanes began a search over the route today.

Rooming Quarters Assailed by Labor

A resolution which declares that the "vast majority of rooming quarters in Washington are firetraps, indecent, unsanitary and unfit for human habitation" has been adopted by the Washington Central Labor Union.

The action points to the recent deaths of five persons in rooming house fires as proving the need for Congress to act to provide adequate sanitary low cost housing for the District.

The resolution also put the union on record as demanding an immediate and thorough investigation of fire hazards in the city.

In another resolution the union went on record supporting the protests of William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, against the alleged murder of Joseph Shoemaker by a Florida lynch mob.

Pacific Clippers Wait To Check New Motors

San Francisco, Jan. 15 (AP).—Pan American Airways announced today that departure of their clipper planes on Pacific mail flights has been delayed so as to test newly installed motors.

The Philippine Clipper recently flew on three of its four motors while between Hawaii and San Francisco because the fourth threw oil, Col. C. M. Young, Pacific Coast division manager, said.

"There is nothing unusual in delaying departure of the clippers," he explained. "We merely are utilizing the new type motors in line with our policy of safety. It is no small matter to pioneer and establish an air-mail and passenger route over 8,000 miles of water."

Slayer of 4 Gives Up Without a Struggle

Kingston, Jamaica, Jan. 15 (AP).—Cornered in a forest cave, an aged man wanted for quadruple murder surrendered quietly to police of Monetgo Bay today after he had been sought for four months.

Dirty and in tatters, with his beard trailing below his chest, Benjamin Williams was discovered accidently by a farmer who came across the cave where Williams apparently had been hiding since the shooting of four relatives in September. He had fled after allegedly killing his brother, Joseph; a niece, a nephew and a cousin in a fit of rage at Joseph's sale of some family lands while he was not at home.

Four Firemen Called To Lift Victim of Fall

Four husky firemen attached to the Fire Department Rescue Squad were called to put Mrs. Emily Crawford, 64-year-old invalid, in bed yesterday.

Mrs. Crawford, who lives at 1200 K street northwest, tired of lying in one position, rolled over in bed and fell to the floor. Four roomers in the house, three women and a man, tried to help, but their efforts failed and they called for the Rescue Squad.

Mrs. Crawford weighs 350 pounds.

U. S. Ship, West Hika, Grounded Off England

Seaham, Northumberland, England (Thursday), Jan. 16 (U.P.).—The American steamer West Hika, 5,275 tons, ran aground a few miles from here early today during a fog.

The Cullercoats radio station messaged that there was no immediate danger. However, a Seaham harbor life boat and coast guard cutters from Tyne and Wear rushed to the stranded vessel's assistance. The vessel is owned by the Waterman Steamship Corporation.

Hauptmann Pleas Due Today

capitol throughout the day. Attorney General David T. Wilentz, who prosecuted Hauptmann and has been critical of Gov. Hoffman's activities, also was absent from the capitol.

Again Predicts Reprieve.

Wilentz, located in New York, asserted "you'll have to ask the Governor" if there is to be a reprieve, but added:

"You know what I said to the appropriations committee, 'I have reliable information that the Governor would grant a reprieve.'"

The possibility that Gov. Hoffman had obtained an important new statement from Hauptmann himself, or from some other person professing to have knowledge of the crime, was speculated upon in the light of the mysterious actions of the officials.

Col. Mark O. Kimberling, State prison warden, said today he had not seen Hauptmann since last Saturday—the day the prisoner's plea for a commutation of sentence to life imprisonment was turned down by the State Court of Pardons.

He would not comment on the significance of the fact that he has not been making his customary daily visits to the death house.

Gov. Hoffman announced through his press aid that he had reached no decision on a reprieve. He is continuing his independent investigation of the kidnaping case, said the representative, William Conklin.

Conklin added that the Governor was seeking legal advice on his reprieve power—a power which Attorney General Wilentz contends expired 90 days after Hauptmann's conviction last February 13.

Hauptmann was visited, in addition to his attorneys, by his wife, Anna. Tomorrow is the last day she may see him, unless a reprieve or court action delays the execution, Col. Kimberling said.

"Richard is confident and not a bit nervous," his wife said as she left the prison.

"Somehow, he doesn't seem to have the least fear that he will die Friday night.

"I asked him if he wanted to see the baby (their infant son, Manfried), and he said, 'You know what the baby means to me, but I won't see him here. I'll see him somewhere else.'"

Asked whether she intended to ask Gov. Hoffman for a reprieve, she said:

"I don't know what is the right thing to do. I will do everything to help Richard. It might be good to see the Governor."

Six steps from where Hauptmann was talking with his wife through a heavy screen, electricians were testing the electric chair.

Illinois Miners Aroused by U.S. Bombing Probe

New Union Fights Court's Order for Records; 3 Years Covered.

By the Associated Press.

Springfield, Ill., Jan. 15.—Rival unions of Illinois' turbulent coal fields were stirred today by a Federal grand jury investigation reportedly covering mine war bombings since 1932.

Closeted with the grand jury were Department of Justice agents who were reported to have carried on an undercover probe for more than a year.

The only hint as to the jury's activity came when officials of the Progressive Miners of America, who were subpensed and ordered to produce their organization's records, sought court aid to evade this duty.

To Federal Judge J. Earl Major, who declined to quash the subpenas when requested by counsel for Progressive Miners leaders, Assistant United States District Attorney Marks P. Alexander explained:

"This matter regards the bombings which have been going on in southern Illinois for the last three years."

Scores of mines, houses and freight trains were wrecked in both central and southern Illinois by the blasts growing out of picketing and bloody riots in the warfare between the Progressives and the older United Mine Workers of America union. The Progressives left the U. M. W. A. after internal union dissension over wage contracts and the administration of the International U. M. W. A. president, John L. Lewis. Both have striven to dominate the coal fields of the State since.

S. L. Jones, of Belleville, secretary-treasurer of the Progressives, and John Taylor, of Gillespie, their relief chairman, requested the court to quash the subpenas directed against them.

Especially wanted for the grand jury's inspection, Government attorneys indicated, were accounts of relief payments and agents' expense accounts since the P. M. A. group was formed in 1932.

Watching the court proceedings intently was Ray Edmundson, State president of the U. M. W. A., who declared its books were available, if desired.

Trade Board Fire Holds Up Traffic

The home-going, rush hour traffic was snarled for several blocks in the vicinity of Eighteenth and G streets northwest yseterday by fire apparatus answering an alarm at 718 Eighteenth street.

Hose across tracks on Eighteenth street tied up street cars for several blocks. Traffic, rerouted up Seventeenth street to Pennsylvania avenue, caused a general jam that took police 15 minutes to untangle.

The fire, in the Premier Apartments, now used by the economic division of the Federal Trade Board, was confined to a storeroom in the rear of the building. Damage was slight.

Chancellor of Austria To Visit Czechoslovakia

Vienna, Jan. 15 (AP).—Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg prepared tonight to go to Praha, Czechoslovakian capital, tomorrow, on a mission which he described as a journey to find new friends for Austria in the Society of Central European Nations.

Some political observers expressed the belief that central Europe may be on the threshold of new economic orientation. They said they thought a step was being taken which in the course of years might revive some of the economic aspects of the old Austro-Hungarian monarchy.

Schuschnigg plans to confer with Premier Milan Hodza and President Eduard Benes, and to deliver a lecture on the economic theme.

Colombian Earthquake Routs Starving Natives

Pasto, Colombia, Jan. 15 (AP).—Hundreds of half-starved and naked inhabitants of the district around the village of La Chorrera were fleeing today toward the town of Ipiales after a new earthquake shook the region. Many residents of the villages of Sapuyes and Ospina, which were destroyed, were living in ditches covered with branches.

Yesterday's quake, which made difficult the work of relief parties, unearthed the bodies of persons buried in last week's landslides. Several relief workers were killed.

Vidal, Shocked, Goes to Scene Of Air Tragedy

Broken Propellor or Water in Gas Suspected as Cause of Crash.

Government aviation officials, stunned by the news of the worst accident in the history of American commercial aviation, could ascribe no definite cause yesterday to the crash Tuesday night near Goodwin, Ark., in which 14 passengers and a crew of 3 of a crack transcontinental plane lost their lives.

Eugene Vidal, chief of the Bureau of Air Commerce of the Department of Commerce, and Col. Harold E. Hartney, technical adviser for the Copeland sub-committee of the Senate investigating air-line safety, left last night for the scene.

They will join R. W. Schroeder, head of the airline inspection service, and B. M. Jacobs and J. B. Jaynes, inspectors, in a thorough investigation of the events leading up to the accident. The latter three already are in Goodwin studying the mysterious crash.

Two Theories Advanced.

Secretary Roper commenting on the accident at his press conference yesterday said, "The crash was very distressing to everyone concerned with the safety of air travel."

While officials steadfastly refused to be quoted, stating that any comments they might make would be in the nature of "guesses," two theories were receiving considerable attention yesterday.

The first, and most prominently mentioned as officials studied maps of the area around Goodwin, was that a propeller broke, setting up a vibration that tore one of the engines from the wing and thus made the plane unmanageable.

A second "guess" was that somewhere along the line the plane's tanks "got water in them." This might have occurred through careless gassing operations by field attendants or because of an improperly serviced gasoline truck that contained some water.

No Faith in Gas Theory.

"But I don't put much faith in that gas theory," one official commented informally yesterday.

If that had been the only trouble, he pointed out, Pilot Marshall would have been able to make the emergency field at Forrest City, which was only 15 miles behind him, or the field at Brinkley, 10 miles ahead of the scene of the crash.

The area is dotted with Department of Commerce emergency fields and city airports which sometimes are small but big enough in case of trouble. There are lights along the airways and radiobeams.

This line of reasoning was concurred in by J. Carroll Cone, assistant director of air commerce, who wrote in an official department memo to his superiors that, "from available information at hand now, it is not believed that weather conditions, or air navigation ground facilities were contributing factors in the accident, as the plane crashed en route from Memphis to Little Rock practically on the course, being slightly to the right of the course which is the proper place for them to fly."

Washington officials of American Airlines were unable to shed any light on the mystery. They stated they had received no word as yet concerning probable causes.

Pilot Marshall was one of the line's senior pilots, and had been specially selected for service on the Southerner, the company's crack New York-to-Los Angeles plane.

Under recently enacted legislation officials of the Department of Commerce are required to make public a full statement of their findings in the accident. This may take two or three weeks to complete.

War Plane Forced Down.

Khartum, Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, Jan. 15 (Reuters).—An Italian military plane made a forced landing today at Tokar, Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, north of Eritrea. The four occupants of the plane were not injured.

Doomed Plane Victim Scrawled Note to Kin

Memphis, Tenn., Jan. 15 (UP). A madly scrawled note across the back of a crumpled envelope tonight gave indication one of the 17 victims in the crash of the American Airlines' plane last night sought hastily to send a last message to loved ones.

The envelope was found near the body of Sam Schwartz, Atlantic City, one of the 17 who died in the worst disaster in the history of American commercial airlines.

"My Leo—Ernie—Ben—Sis—all in Heaven with papa, your Andrew—Please write to Eddie," the scrawled note said.

The envelope was old—bearing a 1935 postmark. But the writing on the back was fresh. On its face, the evelope bore the eddress: "Mrs. Alonzo Tweedale, Hotel Apollo, Atlantic City, N. J."

Schwartz was manager of the Apollo Hotel.

Plane Crash Dead Robbed of Money

By the Associated Press.

Goodwin, Ark., Jan. 15. — V. L. Fry, Forrest City, Ark., Federal revenue officer, said today that robbery of victims of the American Airlines transcontinental ship near here started soon after the discovery of the wreckage.

One of the first to reach the scene of the disaster, Fry said he saw an unidentified man seize what appeared to be a large roll of bills from the pocket of one of the victims, then flee through the marsh country.

"I would have shot at him," declared Fry, "but I was afraid of hitting someone else in the dark."

Officers reported finding empty pocketbooks of dead passengers on the ground.

They said some of the searchers tore pieces from the wrecked plane.

The plane carried 11 sacks of mail, three or four of which were found intact. The other were not. Letters were scattered over the scene like leaves, and a postoffice crew was set to work picking them up.

D.C. Passenger Quit Plane Before Crash

William M. Taylor, of 2100 Massachusetts avenue northwest, the only Washingtonian who boarded the ill-fated Southerner of the American Airlines here Tuesday afternoon, plans to return to the Capital by train.

Taylor, an employe of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, left the plane at Memphis. When he learned of its crack-up that evening in an Arkansas swamp, he called office associates to inform them of his safety.

He announced he would make the return trip early next week by train. Taylor's home, before coming to Washington several years ago, was Norfolk, Va.

Although Taylor was the only Washingtonian to ride on the plane's last trip, three other passengers boarded the big Douglas at the Washington Airport. One, W. S. Howland, managing editor of the Nashville Tennesseean, left the ship at Nashville; the other two were killed.

Bulgarian Minister To Washington Named

Sofia, Bulgaria, Jan. 15 (U.P.).—Dimitri Naoumoff, head of the press department, tonight was appointed Bulgarian minister to Washington.

Pilot Marshall radioed that all was well and conditions favorable at 7:18. Thereafter the ship's radio was silent.

Two farmers who testified at an inquest held beside the ship today by Coroner J. C. Crawford, of St. Francis County, told of seeing the ship sail low over the woods with a motor "that didn't sound right." They saw it disappear into the trees and helped to organize the hunt which resulted in finding of the wreck at midnight.

The coroner's verdict was simply that the 17 aboard died "by accidental plane crash."

Company Head on Hand.

President C. R. Smith, Fort Worth, of American Airlines, who said early today the plane was reported in good condition before leaving Memphis, headed the group of company officiels who flew here to open a formal investigation.

Rubber boots were at a premium as hundreds of persons sought to penetrate the bog. Early sightseers who bought up the meager supply of boots in Goodwin stores resold them to the highest bidders upon their return to firm ground.

Gov. J. M. Futrell of Arkansas said he was "terribly shocked" by the disaster.

"The death of W. R. Dyess particularly affects me," the Governor said. "He was my personal friend."

Harold E. Hartney, special investigator for the Senate Commerce Committee, planned to leave Washington today for the scene of the accident.

$480,000 Paid For McCormick String of Gems

Last of Emeralds in Collection of Rockefeller's Daughter Is Sold.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Jan. 15.—The last of the prize pieces in the late Edith Rockefeller McCormick's $3,000,000 jewel collection—a rope of ten huge emeralds and 1,637 small diamonds—was sold to an unnamed buyer today for $480,000.

The exquisite necklace no longer will dazzle Chicago's elite as it did in the days when the daughter of John D. Rockefeller, sr., reigned over Gold Coast society. It will glitter instead in European social centers. Names were jealously guarded, but agents who figured in the transaction disclosed the purchaser was "living abroad."

Probate Judge John O'Connell authorized the Chicago Title & Trust Co., executors of the estate, to sell the necklace to a mysterious client represented by Attorney Henry Mannix, of New York. Cartier, Inc., of New York, was the selling agent at a net commission of approximately 10 per cent. The date, time and place of delivery were not announced.

Mrs. McCormick commissioned Cartier's some years ago to "find the finest collection of emeralds in the world." The jewelry firm gathered ten great green stones—the largest 100 carats. Mrs. McCormick paid them $350,000.

Following her death in 1932 claims of nearly $9,000,000 were filed against her estate. Two necklaces, companion pieces of the one sold today and once valued at $1,000,000 each, were bought by unnamed parties for a total of $600,000 in 1935. Sale of these gems and the auction of heirlooms at her Lake Shore Drive mansion brought in $800,000 last year.

Executors obtained permission to break up the emerald rope when they dispaired of finding a buyer for the entire piece, but it was later decided to keep it intact. They said only smaller articles now remained in the cache of precious stones.

Claims of approximately $2,700,000 have been allowed against the McCormick estate—once appraised at $40,000,000. Many of these have not been paid because of liquidation of her holdings is incomplete.

Grange Splits With New Deal On Agriculture

Demands Export Subsidies and High Tariffs on Farm Products.

By the Associated Press.

The National Grange virtually parted company with the Administration over new farm legislation yesterday by recommending a 10-point program stressing export subsidies and high agricultural tariffs.

Submission to Congress of the powerful farm group's proposals brought immediate forecasts of a bitter legislative fight over substitutes for the invalidated agricultural adjustment act. President Roosevelt and Secretary Wallace have consistently opposed export subsidies.

Grange leaders, it was learned, have conferred with the agricultural committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, the National Manufacturers Association, the National Chemurgic Council and other groups.

Whether these organizations would throw support to the grange program was uncertain. Officials of the American Farm Bureau Federation and the Farmers National Grain Corporation indicated they would stand by the Administration.

Back Cash Payment.

Grange representatives last week joined other farm groups in unanimous approval of a seven-point farm program, based on soil conservation and a domestic allotment plan with cash payment to farmers, but at that time they made reservations pointing to the split which came yesterday.

The decision to offer the recommendations was reached soon after Senator Norris (Republican), Nebraska, and other Senators said on Tuesday they did not believe a law providing control of farm production could be written to meet the constitutional requirements outlined by the Supreme Court.

Administration leaders and members of the farmers' conference which indorsed the soil conservation plan said some form of production control should be continued.

"We do not agree with those who believe that it is possible to revive legislation that has been declared unconstitutional by simply restating its purpose," the Grange executive committee said in its statement to Senate and House Agriculture Committees. "Neither do we support those who hold that all corrective agricultural legislation is doomed."

The grange asked Congress to provide this program:

Appropriations to pay balances due on 1935 adjustment contracts.

Expansion of the surplus commodity corporation to handle surpluses as follows:

(a) By maintaining commodity loans and farm storage of commodities; (b) by using export debentures "and other measures best suited" to export surpluses; (c) by developing new and industrial uses of farm products; (d) by development of new crops and new markets; (e) by furnishing relief supplies.

Protect American markets for American farmers by: (a) Curbing imports to "actual need" and non-competitive products; (b) amendments of reciprocal trade agreement law, providing for ratification of treaties by the Senate and repeal of most-favored-nation clause; (c) elimination of most of agricultural free import list.

Provide an "honest dollar," preventing uncontrolled inflation or deflation.

Support farmer-owned and controlled cooperatives.

Maintain "ample" rural credit facilities.

Consider consumer interests and seek expansion of consumption of domestic products.

The first three of the Grange recommendations were reported to be concessions to the Administration and to other farm groups, but leaders placed most emphasis on the export subsidy-high tariff proposals.

In these respects the Grange program was in line with suggestions advanced by George N. Peek, former AAA administrator and long a leader in farm-problem fights. Peek has opposed bitterly the Administration's reciprocal trade agreements, which extend tariff benefits granted one nation in exchange for similar concessions to all nations not discriminatory against American trade.

of Agriculture, twin citadels of the outlawed triple A.

Practically all of the checks due Washington workers were dispensed yesterday. If any workers were missed, they should receive their pay today. Field workers, both in AAA and in the Treasury's processing tax force, will be paid in the next few days.

For more than 3,000 men and women—1,164 AAA workers here and 1,900 in the Treasury's invalidated processing tax unit—it was blue Wednesday as well as pay day. They were notified they go on non-pay status February 1.

Furloughs for 200.

Locally, the breakdown is as follows:

Temporary workers—550 receive 15 days' notice of dismissal.

Permanent workers—114 with marital status, 300 in the comptroller's office and 200 in administrative offices to be furloughed as of January 31.

A total of 100 resignations of local AAA workers has been received, so that terminations of service will aggregate at least 1,164 by February 1.

Information on the fate of the 600 Treasury employes here and the Agricultural Administration's 1,000 field workers was less specific, although it is certain that most, if not all, of them will be let out gradually. The 600 will be retained indefinitely to liquidate tax accounts, it was said.

McCarl's approval of a warrant transferring AAA administrative funds to the Secretary of the Treasury succeeded in overcoming the obstacle presented Tuesday by the Controller General when he held that to pay the Treasury group from processing tax revenues, as has been the case heretofore, would be illegal because collection of such taxes and their use by the Government was outlawed by the Supreme Court.

McCarl Ruling.

Use of AAA administrative funds, of which $80,000,000 remain, for pay roll purposes was authorized by McCarl when he ruled:

"While the unexpended balance of said appropriation remains available for use to the extent necessary to the lawful accomplishment of the purposes for which made as have no connection with or relation to the plan to regulate and control agricultural production, or the assessment or collection of processing taxes, said balance is not available for any other purpose."

Five of the so-called New Deal lodges of the American Federation of Government Employes yesterday went ahead with plans to campaign for a special WPA project to give jobs to those AAA workers whose positions were forfeited by the Supreme Court's decisions. The committee sponsoring the fight consists of John Donovan, NRA Lodge; Mrs. Janet Gaines, Resettlement Administration Lodge; Miss Edna Richter, WPA lodge; Dan Kessler, AAA Lodge, No. 116, and Ben Allen, AAA Lodge, No. 170.

Announcement was made yesterday that 230 employes of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration will be discharged effective February 1. All were hired on a temporary basis.

State Concludes Case In 'Mercy Drowning'

Newburgh, N. Y., Jan. 15 (AP).—The State abruptly rested its first-degree murder case against Mrs. Dorothy Sherwood, 27, today, after introducing a statement purportedly signed by the frail blonde widow, admitting the so-called "mercy drowning" of her 2-year-old son, Jimmy.

Only seven witnesses were called by the prosecution, mostly police and deputy sheriffs. Presentation of the State's evidence required only two hours, as there was little cross-examination by Defense Attorney Stanley B. Johnson.

Selection of a jury was completed before County Judge Jonathan D. Wilson this forenoon and testimony began after short opening addresses by Johnson and District Attorney Henry Hirschberg.

Farley Moves To Keep Power Over Air Mail

Disapproval of Strict Rules on Tariffs Scored in Letter.

Opposing efforts to invoke Interstate Commerce Commission regulation of commercial air operations, Postmaster General James A. Farley moved yesterday to continue his own department's power over airmail lines, and preserve what he called "the natural and fair competition existing."

Disapproval of "strict or hide-bound rules and regulations" and fixed charges for air passenger and express tariffs, was expressed in a 17-page letter from Farley to Chairman Burton K. Wheeler, of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee.

Wheeler's committee has before it a bill by Senator Pat McCarran (Democrat), Nevada, to transfer air control to the I. C. C. In resisting the transfer, Farley acted once more to manitain an authority which has already brought him into private conflict with the commission.

Rift Is Disclosed.

Meanwhile, disagreement on another front between the Postoffice and Commerce departments over proposed shipping legislation was disclosed by Secretary of Commerce Roper to have been placed before President Roosevelt. Although Roper did not explain the issues at stake, it was reported the Postoffice Department wants ocean-mail contracts terminated within 90 days after enactment of a new shipping bill. Roper is said to favor Copeland bill provisions, calling for discontinuance of contracts over a year's period.

In the matter of air traffic, Postmaster General Farley favors continuance of the existing new airmail act with few changes. But even under this law, he was in disagreement with the I. C. C. over application of the Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., to establish a new route between Albuquerque, N. Mex., and San Francisco.

Although Farley challenged the commission's jurisdiction, the I. C. C. overruled him and scheduled a hearing.

Laying down a definite policy for the handling of air lines and their development in the next few years, the Postmaster General's letter to Senator Wheeler indicated a shift in what was once an Administration objective to consolidate land, air and water regulation under an enlarged Interstate Commerce Commission. The commission now is limited to raising or lowering air mail rates.

Fight Dates to 1934.

Postoffice regulation of airplanes has been involved in political discussion ever since the existing air mail contracts were canceled by the President in 1934.

In his letter to Wheeler yesterday, Farley said the commercial air industry, in its present "experimental state," should be permitted to "feel thier way along."

"It is my opinion that the natural and fair competition existing will do more to develop the aviation industry than any rules made by a Government bureau," he said.

He suggested it might not be fostered by the McCarran bill and Interstate Commerce Commission control. Safety measures, he said, could be better handled by an administrative rather than a semi-judicial organization. He declared the American air transport system was the world's "finest."

Townsend Plan Defended.

By the Associated Press.

Representative Monaghan (Democrat), Montana, presented figures to the House yesterday which he said proved it costs the average American $175.25 a month to live.

With Dr. F. E. Townsend listening in the galleries, Monaghan defended the plan to pay Government pensions of $200 a month to the aged.

Mining Congress Attacks New Deal

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 15.—Resolutions calling for a balanced budget and assailing various New Deal measures were adopted by the American Mining Congress today at the closing session of the thirty-eighth annual meeting.

Without mentioning any Administration laws by name, the congress scored labor legislation, Federal administration of relief and present Federal tax laws affecting business.

Julian D. Conover, of Washington, secretary, said the congress did not act on the Guffey coal act. The congress called fo rsubstitution of "direct relief at reasonable subsistence rates for work relief," and urged that Federal administration of relief be discontinued.

A full slate of officers headed by Howard I. Young, of St. Louis, Mo., was re-elected. J. D. Francis, of Huntington, W. Va., was elected director.

Itzel Is Silent On Trip to N. Y. In Loring Case

Tear Hints Officer May Have Seen Brother of Girl's Fiance.

Back from a secret trip to New York, Lieut. Joseph Itzel, Baltimore detective investigating the murder of Corinna Loring at Mount Rainier, yesterday refused to discuss the object of his visit.

"I can't say anything about whom I talked to, and I wouldn't like to discuss that phase at this time," he told reporters when he reached Upper Marlboro, scene of investigation activities.

He was accompanied to the metropolis by Sergt. Leo Vogelsang, also of the Baltimore police force, who has been acting as chief assistant to Lieut. Itzel.

Shortly after they reached the office of State's Attorney Alan Bowie, Richard Tear, fiance of the slain public stenographer, went into conference with the two men. When he left he said the detective merely wantd to "clear up a few points."

Asked if he knew why the men went to New York, he suggested that they might have talked to his brother, H. E. Tear, located near New York City. There has also been earlier mention of the possibility of Itzel questioning a former suitor, at whose home Corinna visited several years ago.

Joseph P. McCurdy, president of the Maryland-District of Columbia Federation of Labor, said yesterday his organization will file a complaint with the State roads commission about conditions of the Crain and Defense highways, the Associated Press reported.

He issued the statement in Baltimore after attending a meeting of the federation executive council in Washington.

"The Crain and Defense highways are too narrow and are in a deplorable condition," McCurdy asserted. "The council decided to ask the State roads commission to widen and improve these roads.

He disclosed also that the council had recorded itself as opposed to the passage of "any form of sales tax at the special session of the Legislature."

Chevy Chase Club Backs Peace But Opposes Anti-War Bonds

Action Follows Talks by Peace Leader, Veterans Representative on Opposite Sides of Topic; Darling Pleads for Conservation Aid.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Telephone, Shepherd 2363.

Members of the Woman's Club of Chevy Chase, Md., voted for peace measures, but against the purchase of peace bonds, at a meeting yesterday in the assembly room of the Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church.

The large membership present took action after hearing Frederick J. Libby, executive secretary of the National Council for Prevention of War, explain why his organization is offering these so-called "bonds" for sale, and a reply by George R. Brobeck, national legislative representative of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. Libby declared that the council is a middle-of-the-road organization which asks that the people say peace with votes. He said also that it is an organization based on American principles in which some 30 organizations concur.

"We must not temporize, but must have adequate national defense," said Brobeck. "If the people of the United States want to spend their money, it may be given to some of the homes for orphan children."

"Because we have despoiled this continent of what clothed and fed us we have relief rolls today, not because of machinery," declared N. ("Ding") Darling, former chief of the United States Biological Survey, in another address to the club. He commended the organizations which are working for the preservation of wild life.

At the business session the chairman of public welfare, Mrs. R. S. d'Espard, reported that gifts of rubber shoes and galoshes had been made to the children of the Sanatorium for Tubercular Children at Glenn Dale, Md. The club voted a contribution of $15 to the Will Rogers Memorial Fund. Announcement was made of the appointment of a nominating committee to include Mrs. Eugene E. Stevens, Mrs. Joseph T. Maguire, Mrs. Sanford Bates, Mrs. Harold DeCourcy and Mrs. C. D. Snow.

During the meeting there was an exhibition of pastels by Mrs. H. B. Leary, jr., of Chevy Chase. The soloist was Mrs. A. B. Fast, who sang two solos, "Lo, Hear the Gentle Lark," by Bishop, and "Ho, Mr. Piper," Mrs. S. Jay McCathran was accompanist.

Residents of Bethesda and Chevy Chase are being approached by representatives of local civic organizations interested in the development of the Newcomb Club Bethesda Public Library in a canvass to determine the advisability of imposing a tax of 2 cents per $100 assessed valuation to finance the library.

The canvass was authorized at a meeting of delegates from the civic groups in the library Tuesday night, at which time it was voted to ask the Maryland General Assembly to authorize imposition of the tax if the survey reveals the public will sanction the move.

It was estimated at the meeting that a 2-cent tax on the Bethesda and Chevy Chase fire tax areas would raise approximately $7,000 per year. A similar tax on the Bethesda area alone would raise about 3,200. Since the library actually is located in Bethesda, the question was raised concerning the advisability of taxing Chevy Chase residents, and the current survey was authorized to secure a satisfactory answer.

Council Studies Charter Change For Alexandria

Bill Seeks Amendment to Make Attorney, Collector Offices Elective.

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU.
907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 523.

The city council of Alexandria at its regular meeting discussed the proposal of State Delegate Maurice Rosenberg, of Alexandria, to introduce a bill in the Legislature seeking an amendment to the charter of Alexandria, making the offices of city attorney and city collector elective instead of appointive positions.

Mayor E. C. Davison stated he had written Delegate Rosenberg requesting him to furnish the council with a copy of the proposed bill, and asked that when such copy is received he might be empowered to call a special meeting to study its provisions.

Councilman John T. Ashton asked that the council rescind action of a former meeting in appointing a special committee composed of Mayor Davison, Councilman H O'B. Cooper and himself to go to Richmond and oppose a bill to be introduced, according to published stories, asking for the positions of city collector, city attorney, city engineer, city manager, city auditor, police chief and fire chief be made elective. Councilman Ashton stated this action of council was taken on the strength of reading published stories of Delegate Rosenberg's intention, and later stories published had been contradictory. Consequently, the action of such a committee would be problematical. Rules of council, however, forbid reconsideration of any action of the council under 30 days.

Mayor Davison stated his opposition to making the positions of city collector and city attorney elective, as no man elected to either of these offices could serve the city in the disinterested way as an appointive officer, and it would be impossible to forget his position before the voters.

Dr. Robert South Barrett appeared before council asking for the rezoning of certain sections of the city to permit building row houses, stating he is interested in erecting approximately 100 houses of moderate rental for the moderate salaried man or woman, and at present was prepared to start work on five such houses in the block of North Payne street, bounded by Princess and Oronoco streets. The plans provide for 6-room brick houses, hardwood floors, bath, hot-water heat, in fact modern houses at an approximate cost of $3,500 each, to rent for $30 per month. He explained there has been a tremendous increase in rents and houses are not available just now, particularly for those of moderate means. The matter was referred to the zoning committee to arrange the change.

The annual ordinance was read and minor changes made, including cutting the license for weighing and merchandise slot machines to $1 each, from $2 to each machine, and a sliding scale based on the number of machines owned by one person and placed in one store. A boarding house license was cut from $10 to $5, with the privilege of serving meals.

On motion of Councilman Barley, the city was instructed to look into the State requirements about fire escapes on schools and apartments.

Announcement was made that the city treasurer has made arrangements to place tax warrants on sale at the Potomac Community House, under the auspices of the Sixth Ward Citizens Association, for the convenience of tax payers who cannot reach the city treasurer's office during regular hours.

A detailed report of the city health office for the last year was submitted by Dr. W. Lewis Schafer, city health officer, showing the activities of his department.

A communication of Police Capt. John S. Arnold, relative to changes in bus routes, was received, suggesting a meeting of the traffic board with a committee from the city council and representatives from the bus company. Mayor Davison asked that three members of the council who can give time to this matter confer with him prior to making any appointments.

A communication from Mrs. Frances E. Norton asking that the alley running from Washington to St. Asaph street, by the Alexandria postoffice, be given a name, was referred to the city attorney to prepare a suitable resolution after consultation with others having the right of way over the alley. Mrs. Norton suggested it be called Norton lane, in honor of her late husband, Judge J. K. M. Norton.

The city attorney is also to prepare suitable resolutions providing for the appointment of Detective Sergt. Edgar Sims, to the position of lieutenant; Detective Butler to the rank of sergeant, and to Thomas Cockrell as assistant fire chief.

Maryland Trappers See Heavy Muskrat Season

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Crisfield, Md., Jan. 15.—The muskrat season in Somerset County and throughout the State of Maryland is under way. Returns from the industry in the State are expected to pass $1,500,000 during the season, which began January 1 and will end March 15.

With the exception of Louisiana, Maryland is the largest muskrat fur-producing State in the country and in fur markets the pelts of black muskrats caught in this State bring the highest prices.

Depositors Get Checks.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Clarksburg, W. Va., Jan. 15.—Five per cent dividend checks, totaling $28,000, have been mailed to depositors of the closed Farmers Bank here. The payment brought the total amount paid out since the bank closed to 70 per cent, the receiver said.

Maxwell Judge Stirred

embalming the body, Dr. MacDonald said.

Blood clots at the base of the brain, which were attributed to the slipper blow by the Government physicians, might have been the result of a passive congestion due to heart failure produced by the depressant effect of acute alcoholism, Dr. MacDonald said.

After a searching study of the autopsy report, Dr. MacDonald concluded that the cause of Maxwell's death would be found elsewhere in the head of Maxwell.

In this connection, the defense attorney pointed out that Drs. Tudor and Foust had autopsied only the head of Maxwell and did not make any study of the heart or other vital organs.

Smith disclosed to the court that Dr. MacDonald has officiated at more than 7,000 autopsies in the last 15 years and that he had been called upon to testify for the Government in more than 1,200 murder cases.

Other Experts Concur.

To bolster the conclusion of Dr. MacDonald, Smith offered the affidavits of Dr. James M. Whitfield, coroner of Richmond, Va., and Dr. Thomas C. Gonzales, acting medical examiner of New York City, who concurred in the district coroner's findings.

Before court opened today, defense counsel learned there was a possibility Dr. Tudor and Foust might modify their conclusions because of the affidavits secured from the pathologists.

If the defense had asked leave of the court to re-question the witnesses, the law would have prevented them from indulging in cross-examination. However, if the Commonwealth recalled them, the defense could cross-examine.

As part of his strategy, Smith then defied the Commonwealth to produce the witness.

"If you are so sure of your case, why don't you recall these witnesses," he shouted. "You surely have something to conceal."

Insurance Refused.

His argument so impressed Judge Skeen that the jurist ordered the Commonwealth attorney to have the doctors in court tomorrow, where defense may then cross-examine.

To support Dr. MacDonald's belief that the death might have been caused by heart failure induced by acute alcoholism, the defense gathered other affidavits.

One purports to show Trigg Maxwell had been rejected two days before his death as a life insurance risk because of a weak heart. The others claim he had been complaining of heart trouble for months before his death.

Witnesses also are available to show at least six of his close relatives have died suddenly within the last few years from apoplexy and heart disease. Other witnesses are ready to testify about his excessive drinking.

Families' Antagonism.

As court opened today, the families involved arrayed themselves on either side of the court. Trigg Maxwell's kin were on the prosecution side, and the Dotsons, Edith's mother's family, sat behind the defense counsel table.

The girl, center of the family fight, appeared slightly nervous, but seemed happy Judge Skeen had seen some merit in the argument Smith presented.

The theory upon which the defense is expected to question the doctors tomorrow is that Maxwell may have died from natural causes induced by a drunken rage.

When Edith arrived home near midnight last July 21, her father was angered and attacked her with a knife and then with a chair. To defend herself she struck him with a slipper which, the Commonwealth claims, resulted in his death.

"This case is attracting more attention than the Scottsboro case," Judge Skeen said in overruling the other defense contentions.

Has Received Letters.

"I have received letters from all over the country, but I am not going to let any of them affect my judgment. I am interested only in doing my duty."

Judge Skeen overruled the contention of M. J. Fulton, of Richmond, one of the defense attorneys, that the indictment under which Edith was convicted was faulty in that it did not charge first degree murder, of which she was convicted.

"This indictment, at the most," argued Fulton, "charged manslaughter and the jury convicted her of murder."

The only sadness Edith showed today was when she said good-by to her mother.

"I wish I could take your place in the cell," said the mother as her daughter was led back to the jail.

Benjamin Gaskins.

Although he had been a member of the Board of Education only since July, the late Benjamin Gaskins had unquestionably proven himself a valuable addition to that important local agency. With a talent for careful examination, and an insistence for full knowledge on every question, he contributed to the board a viewpoint without which its decisions during the past half year might have been considerably less loudly acclaimed. His contribution was a great deal more than that of being a worthy spokesman of his race.

Mr. Gaskins' career, beginning after graduation from the law school of Howard University, explains how he came to combine these exemplary characteristics. As a lawyer his thorough study and polished presentation of cases early won for him the admiration of the District bench and bar. As a citizen he devoted himself to studies of the problems of the Negro in urban life. Together, his vocation and avocation served to fit him admirably for the important task of representing the Negro point of view in the National Capital. The entire community suffers a real loss in his premature death.

The Man Behind The Poet.

Carl Sandburg's poems have ever been couched in the lusty vocabulary of the Hog-Butcher, the Stacker of Wheat and the Player with Railroads. He sees Chicago not as a golden town "where golden houses are," but as a "City of the Big Shoulders." It seems perfectly logical, therefore, that he should hold to the theory that "slang is language that takes off its coat, spits on its hands, and goes to work." But when John Masefield comes to the defense of American slang, pedantic purists may well sit up and take notice. For this is the Poet Laureate of England speaking, successor to Scott, Wordsworth, Tennyson and more lately, Robert Bridges. He it is who must sing upon the launching of a ship, the celebration of a jubilee, the birth of a future king.

Mr. Masefield's reassurance is for the benefit of those who fear that the King's English is being undermined by American talkies. Such words as scram, swell and nerts are becoming the rule rather than the exception. A one-syllabled generation appears to be in the offing. Now is the time for all good grammarians to come to the aid of their parlance.

But, alas, for the illusions of those who might have been looking to the Shropshire man for such aid. He who once inscribed the line, "I have seen the lady April bringing the daffodils" has gone over to the Sandburg camp. Poet Laureate of the British Isles? Yes! But he apparently feels that a man's a man for a' that. It is his opinion that a phrase such as "Don't monkey with the buzz saw" is not only a living and vital expression, but one possessing poetic charm.

Coming from an Oxfordian, this bit of poetic license will cause amusement. Coming from a Poet Laureate, it will create consternation. But coming from John Masefield, it will conjure a real glimpse of the quiet, soft-spoken Boar's Hill inhabitant who was once hobo, ship's cook and barroom bouncer.

The Speed-Up.

Recently The Post's roving reporter roved into this one: a truck driver was thumbed to the curb by a traffic cop.

"What's your hurry?"

"I ain't in no hurry."

Shame-facedly the driver at first denied he had jumped a light, weaved through traffic, sliced a corner and failed to put his hand out on a turn.

But finally came the explanation: he was hauling dirt. The boss paid by the load. The more loads per day, the more money. Inferentially, the more lights jumped and corners sliced, the more in the Saturday night envelope. Times are hard and jobs are scarce. Too often the pressure which jams the foot down on the gas feed comes indirectly from some comfortable executive office, where orders have gone out to speed up—more deliveries per day, less time "wasted" between hauls, quicker service to customers.

Times are hard, jobs are scarce, maybe the cop won't notice, and anyway the kids are hungry and why not take a chance? Thus the city's traffic death toll mounts and angry citizens blame the careless truck driver.

They order things differently in Milwaukee, which this year hangs up the safety record for the Nation in its city hall. When a commercial driver is arrested there, Milwaukee's safety committee sends a letter to the man's employer. It asks him to cooperate in making the town safe for pedestrians and for other drivers.

Because it strikes at the root of the evil, behind and beyond the driver himself, that letter gets results for Milwaukee.

The Great Betrayal.

Yesterday was the seventh anniversary of the Senate vote approving, with one dissenting voice, our ratification of the Kellogg Pact for the renunciation of war "as an instrument of national policy." The occasion received no commemoration from the upper chamber, which will shortly be asked to approve military appropriations of nearly a billion dollars, the largest peacetime budget for national defense ever presented by any American President.

This neglect of the Kellogg Pact anniversary is not accidental. It is symbolic of a profound change in American policy, the significance of which will gradually become bitterly apparent. The United States is abandoning co-operation with the machinery of peace preservation in order to pursue a course calculated not merely to frustrate peace efforts elsewhere, but also to make this country inevitably militaristic. By one of the most profound ironies of history such a policy is being forced by men who denounce our participation in the last war, and is ardently supported by misguided pacifists who believe that denial of realities will of itself secure peace.

The outstanding significance of the Kellogg Pact was that it implied abandonment of the concept of neutrality in behalf of co-operative international effort to prevent or circumscribe war. In words used by Secretary Stimson in describing this treaty: "Hereafter, when two nations engage in armed conflict, either one or both of them must be wrongdoers—violators of this general treaty law. We no longer draw a circle about them and treat them with the punctilios of the duelist's code. Instead we denounce them as lawbreakers."

As our foreign policy is now being redefined at the Capitol, Mr. Hull must eat the words of his predecessor as Secretary of State. There could be no clearer case of violation of the Kellogg Pact than the invasion of Ethiopia by Italy, both nations—by invitation of the United States—signatories of this treaty to outlaw war. But the present Administration has made no attempt to "denounce the lawbreaker." On the contrary it is weakly, though reluctantly, acquiescing against its better judgment in legislation which denies the very existence of the Kellogg Pact.

If this so-called neutrality legislation held any reasonable promise of securing the end ostensibly sought, our betrayal of the treaty we sponsored so recently might be overlooked. Such a course could not be called honorable, but it could be justified by the preservation of peace at home regardless of what happens elsewhere. Assurance of peace, however, is totally lacking in the measure now under consideration.

The clearest evidence of this is found in the coincident national defense budget. Our military advisers are clear-headed experts. They have studied this "neutrality" legislation. And after studying it their answer is: We need a billion dollars for preparedness and we need it quickly. It is interesting that the amount they now ask is nearly one-third greater than President Wilson's military budget for the fiscal year 1917, which anticipated our entry into the World War.

Nobody who has given any close examination to the pending legislation can blame our responsible military advisers for thus insisting upon arming to the teeth. Indeed, it may well be that their demands are too modest for the risks into which Congress seems disposed to plunge us. For on three separate counts the bills now under consideration bring war, for the United States, nearer.

In the first place, as the Nye Committee investigation has demonstrated, almost against its will, it was the entanglements of foreign trade as such, not banker machinations to finance this trade, which brought us to war in 1917. And "normal" foreign trade, with all its inevitable consequences of entanglement, the pending legislation insists upon maintaining. Yesterday the Senate Foreign Relations Committee emphasized this point.

In the second place, by refusing to distinguish between the aggressor and his victim, the pending neutrality legislation definitely encourages aggressive war by powers now arming with that aim in view, and heretofore partly restrained by fear that the United States would observe its solemn pledge to use its influence against their lust for conquest. Japan is thus choosing the appropriate moment to refuse further naval limitation on a basis of inferiority to us.

Finally, by sabotaging the Kellogg Pact and opposing a vindictive, senseless and wanton hostility to the peace-preservation efforts of the League of Nations, the policy now developing actively threatens destruction to such peace-preservation machinery as exists. Thereby we earn the justified contempt and hatred of those who have labored against great odds to create something better than the international anarchy of the past.

It is the privilege of "the good neighbor" to betray the hopes of civilization. But let us at least weigh the advantage to ourselves in such a policy before it is too late. Let us appreciate that the billion dollars for military expenditure in the current budget is only the first installment of what this misnamed neutrality legislation may cost.

Inflation Via The Bonus.

The Senate bonus bill has been skillfully drawn to create the impression that it provides for a safe, orthodox method of discharging an obligation already incurred by the Government, with a minimum amount of strain upon the Federal budget.

Instead of calling for immediate cash payment, it offers the veterans non-transferable bonus bonds which they may either hold until 1945, for the sake of obtaining 3 per cent interest payments, or redeem at face value after June 15. Thus it is impossible to say how great the demands for cash conversion would be, but an extreme estimate places the total at approximately $2,000,000,000 during the coming fiscal year. The Senate bill further increases the Government's existing obligation about $1,000,000,000 in the form of an extra bonus representing interest on the service certificates not yet accrued and remission of interest due on loans against certificates.

Instead of turning to the printing presses to supply the cash which veterans might obtain by surrendering the bonds to be given them, the Government would presumably borrow as usual to replenish its depleted balances. In other words, unless new taxes were voted, passage of the Senate bill would merely add to the volume of uncovered outlays which are being financed by increasing the Federal debt. During the past five years about 85 per cent of the additions made to this debt have been accounted for by bank purchases of Government securities.

The usual procedure is for the banks to buy Government bonds and then credit the Treasury with the amount due in payment. When the Government draws against these deposits, money in some form is put into circulation. Eventually it returns to the banks in the form of private deposits and thus the check currency with which most business transactions are carried on in this country expands. The resultant great rise in bank deposits in recent years, and the huge surplus reserves held by the banks, are evidence of a pronounced kind of credit inflation which thus far has had only a limited effect upon prices.

The issuance of greenbacks to pay the veterans would no doubt be more immediately disturbing to public confidence than the Senate's bond-issue plan. But the differences between the two methods of financing deficits are more superficial than real. If money were printed to pay the veterans, it would either displace other media of exchange or return in the form of deposits to swell bank reserves. In European countries, where bank notes instead of checks are the most commonly employed form of currency, the effect of Government borrowing to meet deficits is immediately reflected in a rise in note issues. As a result, Europeans, unlike Americans, cannot long be deceived into imagining that hopelessly unbalanced budgets have nothing to do with inflation.

So long as Government bond issues are paid for out of the savings of the people the danger of inflation is not great. Government spending is restrained by knowledge that the investment capacity of the country is limited and by the fact that investors demand a fair rate of interest on their advances. However, when interest rates have been forced down to abnormally low levels, and when the chief purchasers of Government securities are the banks, ordinary safeguards against excessive borrowing cease to exist. Under such conditions the creation of deposit currency by the method indicated may continue for an indefinite time until the Government credit is destroyed or credit inflation has become uncontrollable.

These dangers, of course, have been present for a long time. But they become ever more menacing as deficits mount. The evasive controversy over methods of bonus payments merely emphasizes the foolhardiness of our spending policies and the imperative need of finding new tax resources to cover any additional charges which this Congress may decide to vote. A strongly worded warning to that effect appeared in the President's recent budget message. It should be called to the attention of Senator Harrison, who is now asserting that no new taxes are needed to cover the cost of cashing the proposed bonus bonds.

It is never possible to guess which straw is going to break the proverbial camel's back. But it is not difficult to detect the signs of impending collapse when the load becomes unbearably heavy.

Like A Thief In The Night.

Something went wrong, but we shall never know what. As a result, they picked mangled fragments of 17 bodies out of an Arkansas swamp yesterday. Today the ever-present human ghouls, impelled by some obscure psychological deficiency, are prowling over four acres of swamp, picking up bits of fuselage and gear as mementos of America's worst commercial plane disaster.

Which failed—the man at the joy stick or the machine beneath him? An investigating committee will make a report. But it can scarcely hope to be more than a shrewd guess. Sea disasters can usually be probed. There are survivors to tell the tale, the radio may sputter out the answer or divers can descend to pry forth the secret under the sea. Marine engineers and sailors can thus learn from each tragedy.

But in the skies, Death comes like a thief in the night—strikes suddenly and without warning. Rarely does he leave a certain clew in the twisted wreckage which lies as a symbol of man's deathless urge for progress.

Isolation Is Not Enough.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Friends of world order need not be disturbed by isolationist legislation at Washington. Let the storm break and neutrality laws and take-the-profit-out-of-war laws will go by the board in 24 hours. What the Congress can do it can undo. And the student and church groups, now declaring their purpose not to fight for their country, would be swept along on a resistless tide of loyalty to the flag.

Isolation is not enough.

War, once begun, is hard to stop. And suppose we succeeded in keeping out of another general war! What then? After the World War the tragedy of unemployment fell with as heavy a hand on neutrals, such as Holland, as on former belligerents. To lay at the door of the capitalist system or of a defective organization of industry the blame for the business depression in America is to misread facts. What happened here simply reflected world conditions and must happen again. The need of the day is preventive medicine.

Isolation is not enough.

It is a mistaken policy even from the standpoint of self-interest. True, enlightened self-interest demands that we act like men and throw our great economic weight and immense potential military power in the scales in favor of prevention of war—join France and England and the other decent nations of the world in an obligation to use force forthwith against the aggressor.

Our sharing the awful burdens of the World War in a sacred cause is one of the proudest chapters in our history. But for the personal jealousies of a Lodge and his ilk, which prevented us from following the lead of our martyr President and assuming our full share of responsibility for the peace of the world, the war to end war would have gone far to accomplish its purpose. Isolation is not enough.

THEODORE MARBURG.
Baltimore, Md., Jan. 13.

The Klan Revival.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The very existence and purpose of the Klan is repugnant to all Americans who sincerely desire that all peoples of the world and Nation should live and work together in harmony regardless of race or creed. That the Klan exists is evidence of serious defects in our social and economic life. The lethargy of the German people gave them Hitler; our lethargy gives us the Klan.

JAMES HARRISON.
Alexander, Va., Jan. 12.

A New Englander Replies.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Since coming to this part of the United States from New England, I have become a reader of your paper and desire to express my satisfaction for the clean, square American pronouncements therein. Not that I always agree with you, but usually I can.

However, I often disagree quite widely with some of the contributors in your letter column, and just now I am constrained to defend my Pilgrim ancestry. Mr. Howard Lloyd, in his zeal for his Cavalier forbears or his desire to correct a fellow man, falls into the common mistake, as did Mr. Hix, of misstating or confusing historical events. In his letter he states his case of antedating the Pilgrims, then either ignorantly or otherwise drags in the persecutions of the Puritans and by implication charges the Pilgrims with these crimes.

There is no record of any such actions on the part of the Pilgrims. On the contrary, the Quakers and other oppressed and persecuted sects found an asylum at Plymouth. The only stain ever found on the Pilgrim record was when they yielded to the threats of the Puritans and expelled Roger Williams from Plymouth, of which act they repented.

I live in Virginia, I bow my head in respect to those men who settled this my adopted State, the noble men who helped found this Government. Pilgrim, Puritan, or Cavalier all deserve the same homage. Of their noble deeds and memories let us speak; of their failings and frailties let us be silent.

M. O. BRADFORD.

Mr. Smith's Indelible Spots.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A recent correspondent suggests that the Republicans nominate Gov. Alfred Smith as a condition for success at the approaching election. Your correspondent should know that the Republican Party has never resorted to mere expediency to carry an election. It has gone down a few times but always with honor.

Mr. Smith is a Democrat and it can be assumed that he will continue to be. The man who has been a candidate for the Presidency, a Democratic Governor and a lifelong prince in the Tammany stronghold will not change his spots.

The suggestion is more of a reflection on Gov. Smith than upon the Republican Party.

JOSEPH W. THOMPSON.
Washington, Jan. 8.

Opposes Rerouting.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I want to add my protest to that of "Observer," published in a recent issue of The Post, concerning the rerouting of Georgia avenue street cars from Ninth street to Seventh street. The Seventh street cars are horribly crowded with every type of humanity. No time is saved the Georgia avenue patron by the rerouting.

Why not operate a shuttle car on Seventh street from Pennsylvania avenue to Florida avenue or some point beyond and put Georgia avenue cars back on Ninth street? What do other Georgia avenue car riders think of the present route?

HARASSED CAR RIDER.

Appreciation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wish to thank The Post for the sensible and admirable stand it has taken with regard to further publicity for the Lindbergh family.

The District Traffic Problem.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I read with great interest the articles in The Post with regard to traffic violations. I often wish I had someone to be with me, in my daily outings, as a witness to some of the infractions I see. The majority are leaving the curb and making turns without any signals.

ALLAN McL. ALBERT.
Washington, Jan. 12.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In re article in The Post of January 11, enumerating various and sundry open violations of District of Columbia traffic laws and regulations:

In every instance, according to the reporter, the offender admitted knowing he was doing wrong, and yet in each case he or she was advised to study the regulations and warned not to offend again. Why "study the regulations?" They all knew the regulations, knew they were wrong, what they now need is an intelligent, efficient enforcement of these laws and regulations.

Washington, Jan. 11.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: From what you have stated in your traffic articles, quite a few violators of traffic laws are only warned, and told that the next time it means a ticket, but the next time it will probably be another officer, who will make the same assertion; thereby causing a laxity of respect for our laws by the offenders.

These traffic laws were made to be obeyed, regardless of the knowledge of them by the drivers. To help avoid traffic deaths these laws must be enforced and upheld. Not only should lowly Johnny Q. Citizen pay a fine, but the special licensed persons should also be made to do so. They are just as responsible for law observance as any other person.

D. S. BOWIE.
Rockville, Md., Jan. 13.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In regard to the traffic articles running in The Post, my observation is that the following are the most important dangers to be removed:

1. Unsafe cars—Poor brakes, poor lights, poor windshield wipers, poor tires. Suggestion for correction—heavy fines.

2. Not keeping in lane, or if no lane, not keeping same distance from curb while traveling from one intersection to another when traffic is heavy. (Exception—When traffic is light or vision mirror shows ample distance in front of car in rear.) Suggestions for improvement—Heavy fines from $10 to $25; white lines down middle of street. This lane and center-line violation to me is the most dangerous and aggravating of all.

3. Pulling suddenly from curb without signaling or even after signaling if traffic is heavy.

SIDNEY E. KENT.
Washington, Jan. 11.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been greatly interested in your effort to lessen traffic accidents. May I make a suggestion that may prove useful?

All of us see traffic violations, but are unable to call the offender's attention to the fact as we pass quickly. If it could be understood by all that three short blasts on the horn means "Obey the Law," the offending person would realize that he was conspicious, not only to the blower of the horn, but that all within hearing, motorists, pedestrians and police, were apprised of the fact of a traffic violation.

Only he whom the shoe fits would put it on. This three-blast warning would be especially useful to reprove drivers with dazzling lights (to which the authorities seem strangely blind) and pedestrians who cross on the red light.

But the slogan "Obey the Law" applies to all violations. If the public would thus unite in mutual law enforcement accidents would lessen.

The Post Impressionist

SCARCELY had this Column enthroned "A Tale of Two Cities" among the best current motion-pictures than Mr. Otis Ferguson achieved a revolution. He achieved it last week, in the pages of The New Republic.

We are told that Mr. Ferguson achieves a revolution in that weekly weekly. But he must not expect to achieve a revolution against the Post-Impressionist without incurring a counter-revolution.

* * *

"The movie version of Dickens' 'Tale of Two Cities,'" writes Mr. Ferguson, "is a bore . . . The best of Dickens is pretty well lost. The Cruncher are more prominent and infinitely better in the book. But the worst of Dickens—the bathos, smug morality and provincial missionary spirit—is not only retained, but made the bulk of the film."

That for the construction and direction. As for the actors:

"They throw off most of the lines . . . as though they were hollering up an empty steam-boiler, to try out the echo."

Is Mr. Ferguson quite precise in his criticism, quite clear about his own emotions?

Before his ascent to fame, the great critics, far from considering Mr. and Mrs. Cruncher as "the best of Dickens," regarded them as the chief faults of the story: the man an impossible exaggeration, the woman ultimately an unconvincing vehicle for the "provincial missionary spirit . . ."

Obviously, Mr. Ferguson—unlike the present columnist—has never been a real revolutionist in a real revolution. Yet, had he even ever listened to a mob, he would have been disabused of his idea that its voices practice the restraint which he so violently preaches.

Most of the dictionaries will tell him a bore is "a person or thing that wearies." So well does Mr. Ferguson conceal his weariness that we should say this picture was, for him, rather an exasperation.

Indeed, Mr. Ferguson is so exasperated as to let his pet cat out of the bag. He cries:

"Even the best part (of the film), where mobs of people fill the streets and pour along in natural turbulence toward the Bastille, where they converge in one tatterdemalion army, attack and retreat, line the passage of the tumbrils, surround the guillotine, etc.—even these fine things are somewhat canceled by a quite determined playing down of the French Revolution, which is resolved by the special help of printed titles into lawlessness, injustice, unkempt frenzy and little else . . . The movies could make a good film out of 'A Tale of Two Cities,' but they could not make it as one of the fireside classic cycle."

That is rather like bathos. It suggests morality—of sorts—and smug morality. It indicates the provincial missionary spirit of an entirely spinsterish liberalism.

Mr. Ferguson is one of those radicals who savagely condemn all adverse criticism of the radicals' art—on the ground that such criticism is moved, not by the art as art, but by the art as propaganda. Yet here is he himself pumping his submachine-gun all over a conservative's work of art—because it isn't radical.

Who's "hollering" now?

It would be easy to make, "out of" any of the most revolutionary among our friend Gorky's stories, an antirevolutionary motion-picture; but the result wouldn't be Gorky, and it would drive Mr. Ferguson to morphine. Dickens at his best is incredibly good: if he is to be transferred to the screen, the good should go along. At his worst, he is incredibly bad: if he is to be transferred to the screen, the bad should accompany him.

The requisite in a motion-picture of a classic is a likeness of the classic—not some Mr. Ferguson's idea of what political opinions the author ought to have preached, but unhappily didn't. The requisite in a motion-picture audience is a soul that can bear education in conservatism as serenely as school children are supposed to bear an education in—well, in the antithesis.

Dickens was horrified by the cruelties of the French aristocrats and emphasized his horror. But he was more horrified by the brutalities of the revolutionists, and upon that he placed a stronger emphasis. These were the tasks he set himself; he performed them. The task which the film-makers and actors set themselves was the transfer of Dickens' accomplishment to the screen. Until the arrival of that time when the art of the film becomes entirely creative, there is only one legitimate question to be asked of such an interpretation as this picture:

Is it a true interpretation?

The best test is to read the book, then see the picture. However, a reversal of that process will serve.

Mr. Ferguson has seen the picture.

We suggest that he read the book.

Men And Gods.

Paris, Jan. 15.

THE Aga Khan of India, who is not only god of some 5,000,000 Mohammedans but also an honorary citizen of the French city of Aix-les-Bains, has returned to Bombay on divine business, but is expected back for the spring racing season in both France and England. This leaves the social life of the French Riviera and London somewhat poorer, because Aga Khan is not only a picturesque figure in a negative sort of way but a very fast man with money which is collected from the faithful in India and sent to him in Europe.

He owns one of the greatest racing stables in the world, but his sportsmanship is such that he never resorts to miracles on the turf, which is a fortunate thing, because otherwise betting odds would be completely demoralized and stewards eventually would have to rule him off for the good of the game.

He has never been suspected of using his divine powers on the dice or the little white ball which spins around the rim of the roulette wheel in resorts along the French Mediterranean coast. This, too, is fortunate, because it takes no great imagination to picture the indignation of 5,000,000 Mohammedans if they should ever hear that god has been thrown out of a gambling house for using undue influence on the tools.

However, Aga Khan, or Gaga Khan, as he is sometimes called by facetious infidels, never has any need to perform miracles to obtain money. If each of his worshippers contributes only the equivalent of a dollar a year, he is assured of a fair income.

• • • •

HE is picturesque because he is utterly unlike the conventional Oriental. He is portly and dusky and gray and wears horn-rimmed spectacles with powerful lenses which give him that rather pop-eyed appearance, and his attire is that of the ordinary American millionaire residing in France.

He is now 59 years old and is rounding out his fiftieth year as god, having succeeded his father in the position upon the old gentleman's death in 1885. He has a grown son named Prince Aly Khan, who was a co-respondent in a divorce suit in England a few months ago and was ordered to pay the costs of the action—a most undignified predicament for a man who is in line to become god himself in the regular course of succession. However, if there is any wrong in this, according to his code, Prince Aly Khan should be able to fix things up with his father or, failing that, to forgive himself when Aga Khan dies.

Aga Khan's present wife is a French girl whose name was Andress Carron until she married him in Aix-les-Bains in 1929, whereupon she became Her Greatness the Begum Aga Khan. She gave up a job in a store to become Mrs. God to 5,000,000 Mohammedans and mistress of the luxurious villa in Nice named Terpsichore. Immediately after the ceremony in Aix-les-Bains, Aga Khan sat right down at the mayor's desk and wrote out a check for 250,000 francs, which he presented to the municipality, and the Mayor was so grateful that he made the divine bridegroom an honorary citizen of Aix-les-Bains on the spot.

• • • •

THIS was no great honor to God, and for 250,000 francs a man ordinarily figures to become a grand officer of the Legion of Honor. But it was the greatest distinction within the gift of the Mayor of Aix-les-Bains, and, anyway, Aga Khan can become a grand officer of the Legion of Honor at any time he wants to write a check. He may be one already. Queen Victoria made him a knight commander of the Order of the Indian Empire, and he can have any English medal he wants merely for the asking, because the English figure that nothing is too good for a god who can hold 5,000,000 Mohammedans in line by remote control from Epsom Downs or Monte Carlo or wherever he happens to be.

There is an old legend around Europe that 5,000,000 Mohammedans spend a great deal of money buying little bottles of Aga Khan's bath water. In Geneva a waiter in the Hotel Beau Rivage, where Aga Khan had a suite, was planning to organize a deal and make some money exporting bath water to Bombay. But when he approached the chambermaid she insisted that he invariably pulled the plug and let it go down the drain. The waiter said that if he could get so much as one quart he figured to get rich and start a hotel of his own, because he would cut it down with ordinary water, just as American distillers cut one quart of bonded whiskey into indefinite quantities of blended whisky. He said it was the chance of a lifetime and was willing to cut the chambermaid in for some stock in his company, but she said it couldn't be done.

AGA KHAN has gone to India at this time to celebrate his golden jubilee as god of 5,000,000 Mohammedans with a five-day festival starting January 19. They probably will give him a special present of some money, and he is expected back at Villa Terpsichore in Nice a few weeks later.

There are several reasons why Aga Khan puts in most of his time in Europe. He likes the sporting life for one thing, and for another it isn't wise to stay around where people can look him over every day. Already in Bombay there is a rival group which wants to depose Aga Khan. They claim he isn't god at all. They claim theih man is

Neutrality Desirable?

(From a radio address by Raymond Leslie Buell, president of the Foreign Policy Association, delivered last night over the network of the Columbia Broadcasting System.)

PEOPLE are telling you that America got into the last war because we sold arms, wheat, copper and other articles to the warring nations, and because we loaned them money. These people argue that the way to keep out of another war is to adopt so-called "neutrality" legislation, under which we will stop the export not only of munitions but of all other important materials to foreign nations as soon as they begin to fight.

I am willing to admit that this country can keep out of foreign wars if it builds a Chinese wall several miles high around its borders, and if the American people become completely indifferent to everything happening in other parts of the world. But few of the supporters of neutrality legislation, despite all their talk of curtailing profits for the sake of neutrality and peace, are willing to make the sacrifices involved.

Read the neutrality bills before the Senate and see what they provide. They declare that the President shall stop the shipment of munitions to foreign nations who go to war. So far, so good. But in modern war many materials, such as oil and cotton and wheat, are more important than munitions. Do the neutrality bills carry out the doctrine of the isolationists and require that all such trade be stopped when war breaks out? Not at all. The President is under no obligation to stop the shipment of any goods except munitions; and if he decides to put an embargo on raw materials, he cannot interfere with ordinary peace-time trade. This means that we shall continue to ship automobiles, trucks, cotton and oil just as in peace time. Business as usual, is the motto now, instead of complete isolation.

EVEN though the President prevents this trade from increasing above peace-time levels, a warring nation may—just as it did before 1917—seize American goods going to the enemy, while submarines may actually sink our ships. Under the new neutrality, the President may decline to protest against any such actions. But it is nevertheless significant that the isolationist Senators, despite this talk about having no truck with warring nations, should now attempt to preserve peace-time trade. What attitude will they take if this trade is actually destroyed? Last August Senator Borah told the Senate that he wished to prohibit an American from traveling on a ship in a war zone. Today Senator Borah has changed his mind, and now wishes to enforce our rights on the high seas.

I wish also to point out that the same Congress which demands legislation to keep us out of war is voting a billion dollars for the American Army, Navy and air forces. Any fair-minded observer will admit that this new military establishment is far larger than is necessary to defend this country from invasion. Having this powerful force at our command, will the American people quietly acquiesce in the destruction of American lives and property on the high seas or in foreign countries? Under the Chinese wall policy, we should reduce our Army, Navy and air force to the minimum necessary to defend our country from invasion. Instead of doing that, we are spending more money for military purposes than in any other year in which we were at peace.

Finally, real isolation and neutrality means that the American people should have no views about conditions in the rest of the world. The fundamental reason why we went to war in 1917 was because we believed that Germany was in the wrong and should be defeated. The belief may have been wrong, but it was none the less real. America can keep out of a future war only if Americans will not take sides and will keep quiet. But the very people who call most loudly for isolation openly condemn conditions in foreign lands.

• • • •

AMERICANS have criticised more strongly than any other people the persecution of the Jews in Germany and the Catholics in Mexico. In his address to Congress several weeks ago, the President spent 20 minutes in criticising foreign dictatorships. I am glad that the American people have such a strong sense of humanitarianism and justice; but I contend that this sentiment is inconsistent with the idea of peace-at-any-price neutrality.

If we are willing to give up all foreign trade, reduce our Navy to the minimum necessary to protect us against invasion, and refuse to be concerned about conditions abroad, we can keep out of war by so-called "neutrality." But it is obvious that there are few Congressmen willing to pay this price. The grave danger is that supporters of so-called neutrality legislation will lull this country into a false sense of security, when if they showed more intelligence and courage, they would really assist in preventing the outbreak of a new war.

I do not know what the outcome of this struggle of the League against Italy will be, but after a four months' visit to Europe I am convinced that for the first time since the end of the World War a genuine effort is being made to build up the League of Nations as a substitute for war. Some Americans say that the League is merely a tool of British imperialism, but this is untrue. The real British imperialists wanted to make a deal with Mussolini, dividing up Ethiopia. They nearly succeeded in doing it through the Hoare-Laval proposal of December 8. But they failed because of the demand of the common people that the old system of power politics give way to the new system of the League of Nations. The world today is in the grip of a struggle between these two systems, and, for the first time, the League has a chance to win.

• • • •

AFTER visiting the three great dictatorships of Europe, I am convinced that there is a second struggle going on in the world today—a struggle between two ways of life. The way of life supported by the dictatorships, which means the repression of the individual by an all-powerful and arbitrary state, is battling against the way of life supported by the democracies, which believe that the state should become the instrument for developing what is best in individuals. The struggle, in short, is between dictatorships and liberal democracies.

Apparently oblivious to this struggle, a Senate committee in Washington is carrying on an investigation as to how America got into the World War. I don't object to this investigation, but I do protest that the next war, if it comes, will arise under conditions utterly different from the last. An iron-clad "neutrality" policy based on the assumption that history will repeat itself, is bound to fail. The next war will be a war of dictatorships to overthrow the idea of democracy and international co-operation represented by the League. It will be a war resulting in the spread of fascism or communism throughout the world. Neutrality is no formula to meet an attack which, if successful, is bound to be disastrous for the United States.

There is a grave danger that the new neutrality legislation, if adopted, will actually help the Fascist dictatorships in their efforts to commit new aggressions. This is because the legislation provides that American embargoes should be imposed upon all belligerents alike.

I am afraid that the insistence by Congress that the President treat alike League members applying sanctions and an aggressor state will throw a wet blanket on new efforts of Geneva to stop Italian aggression. If so, the United States will greatly encourage Mussolini, Hitler, not to mention Japan, and discourage the efforts of the democracies to build a real league. This danger could be avoided if, instead of attempting to lay down permanent legislation at this time, Congress would merely renew the neutrality resolution of August 31, with an amendment giving the President power to impose an embargo on certain raw materials.

Before a Presidential election one cannot expect Congress to look dispassionately upon any question of foreign policy relating to the League of Nations. The fact remains that there is only one fundamental solution of the war problem. That is the building of an international organization to take the place of war. The first real effort in this direction has been made during the last few months. If we cannot assist positively in this new antiwar movement, then at least let us do nothing to obstruct it.

Kipling Magic

By Karl Schriftgiesser

To The End Of Time.

ONE has to go back over a good many years and many rough highways to find the Kipling who really matters. One has to forget so much in order to remember clearly the magnificence of what is good in all the millions of words that flowed from his pen. But when one has gone back far enough one comes to green pastures watered by a living stream. I don't know, and probably nobody does, how much of Kipling's poetry and prose is destined to immortality and it probably does not matter. At least, not to anyone who still can recall his first reading of "Kim" or the day that his heart sang with the lilt of "Departmental Ditties" or the long nights that passed so quickly with the flying pages of the "Jungle Books."

I suppose anybody who reads at all has tucked away in his own memory the recollection of his first acquaintance with Kipling and I suppose anybody who thinks at all about his reading has, in his own remembrance of things past, the recollection of his first knowledge that however wrong Kipling's philosophy may have been here still was a great man. He was a great man, in his time; and there are some who know that he was much more than the poet of empire, the exponent of strength, the press agent of the Tommy doing another man's dirty work in a strange, hot land. He was, what so many others with great gifts have failed to be, a teller of tales that are read because of the telling rather than for what is told.

• • • •

THERE used to be a library in the city where I lived as a small boy and it was over a mile from my home, a branch of the great building whose marble stones McKim, Mead and White had piled high down in the heart of the city. Here, in this building whose corner entrance once had been the swinging doorway of Mr. O'Toole's barroom, were the long shelves of books bound in the prosaic red canvass which the library invariably used (it could be washed annually). Kipling had a long shelf to himself; each of his books was there, in triplicate, at least, to fill the demand for this author loved of youth.

Kipling belonged to that glorious age. He came before the discovery of Shaw and Wells and when we met these latter-day giants Kipling and his simplicities began to seem pretty thin indeed. He was one who was read when Mark Twain was beginning to seem childish and Henty had already been put by. Kipling, with his marching verse and his sturdy prose, was new meat and very red. Later we were to re-read all these writers and reversals were in order. We found maturities in Mark Twain we had never discovered in those early cruises on the Mississippi and we wondered how we could ever want to emulate a Henty hero. And still later we were to be vexed with the feeling that perhaps Shaw wasn't the Lord and Wells not the one to point the finger to the world's destiny.

And Kipling? Well, that man with the dark mustache and the pipe, who had thrilled primarily because he symbolized an expanding world where still were frontiers to be pushed back, suffered most in the first revaluation; and today we find it necessary to recapture, if we can, the greatness that we once knew was his. We will find it not in his tales of the white man's burden, but in the jungles where the animals talked. We will find it not in the incredibly bombastic praise of imperialism, but in the calm pages of "Kim" and the story of Mulvaney and the humor of "Puck of Book's Hill," and even then we cannot say with finality that these were all great. For none of us know exactly what is greatness, and few of us can wipe away the glamor of the books we read as boys or girls and judge them coldly, as they should be judged.

• • • •

BUT this will always remain, I think, and nothing can take it away: that Kipling was, above all else, a writer. Those "old, old words, grown thin through years of careless usage" that Conrad used to talk about were something malleable in his hands and if he misused them upon occasion there still remain poems and stories in which he placed them exactly right. Do you remember——? But each of us has his own Kipling to remember, and if to some it is "If" and "The Road to Mandalay" and "Soldiers Three," and to others "Without Benefit of Clergy" and "The Ballad of the King's Jester," it makes no difference. I don't believe there is anybody who hasn't some small portion of Kipling which he calls his own.

And this is very much for one man to have done, even in 70 years. So very few, who may also be greater in many ways than Kipling, have this to their credit. And if the critics sneer and turn to T. S. Eliot and say, "Here is the man who has shaped modern poetry more than all others," they may be right. But Kipling was read. Yes, and he became a personal equation for countless men and women. Perhaps the worst of Kipling had the greatest effect and perhaps most of us think of him first as the Jingo and propagandist of empire, but there are many, many others who still hear the animals talking in the jungle and who remember Kim and Stalky and Son and know that Kipling was a magic man once in this world, and that he may remain so to the end of time.

Canada Tests Own New Deal In Court Fight

1934-35 Acts Defended on Grounds They Curb Abuses in Trade.

By the Associated Press.

Ottawa, Jan. 15.—Canada's six red-robed Supreme Court jurists began to hear arguments on whether Canada's so-called "New Deal"—consisting of eight statutes passed by Parliament in 1934 and 1935—was within the jurisdiction of the Dominion government.

The federal government asked the court to decide whether the measures, designed to improve social and economic conditions, infringed the rights of the provinces.

N. W. Rowell, one of the Dominion counsel, began the arguments in one of the most important legal battles in the history of the Dominion, contending that amendments to the criminal code to implement the findings of the commission on price spreads and mass buying were within the power of the Dominion.

The amendments, he said, were framed to curb unethical business practices, unfair wages and abuses in trade which the commission reported after almost a year's study.

Similar to U. S. Outline.

These amendments were the first point taken up before the court. Other statutes in the government's reference to the court were the unemployment and social insurance act, natural products marketing act, minimum wage act, limitation of hours work act, lay of rest act, Dominion trade and industry act and farmers' creditors arrangement act.

Canada's written constitution, the British North American act, defines the jurisdictions of the Dominion and the provinces along somewhat the same general lines as the Constitution of the United States defines the rights of the Federal and State governments.

Property and civil rights were left with the provinces, which will contend that several of the acts passed by the Conservative government at the last parliamentary session infringe the jurisdiction of the provinces.

London Overrules Act.

Amendments to the criminal code are admittedly matters of federal jurisdiction, but the Privy Council in London has held that Parliament cannot make an act a crime which is not in the nature of a crime, merely to gain federal jurisdiction over it.

In his argument Rowell claimed the amendments were within the power of the Dominion government because of its jurisdiction over the criminal code and matters of trade and commerce.

He said it also had the authority to legislate under its power to preserve "peace, order and good government" on any matter not specifically placed under the jurisdiction of the provinces. This, he declared, was the real intention of the writers of the British North American act.

Chief Justice Duff asserted this principle might permit the Dominion to invade provincial rights, but Rowell did not agree. The Dominion attorney expressed belief the government has power to name anything a crime which it believes contrary to the general interest.

Illegal Hunter Draws $1,310 Fine, Jail Term

Britton, S. Dak., Jan. 15 (AP).—Illegal hunting today brought Harry Byrnes, Minneapolis, one of the severest penalties ever imposed for game law violations in this State—a $1,310 fine and a year in jail.

Byrnes and two companions were arrested Monday. The officers said the hunters had 118 pheasant, 2 Hungarian partridges and 1 prairie chicken in their possession.

To Judge Van Buren Perry, Byrnes, who pleaded guilty, said he intended to sell the birds to Twin City restaurants. He was fined $10 per bird and an additional $100 for hunting without a license.

Navy Maneuvers Scheduled As Hull Regrets Parley Upset

Position As Announced by Norman Davis Believed by Secretary to Have Given Position of United States Clearly.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull yesterday expressed regret that progress in the London naval conference has been unsatisfactory.

He was reported by aids to have said the address to the conference made by Norman Davis, chairman of the United States group attending the five-power meet, was a thoroughly definite and elaborate statement of the American position, thus requiring no additional comment from Washington.

Almost coincident with the Davis address in London and the Japanese walk-out was the announcement by Secretary of the Navy Claude Swanson yesterday that plans had been completed for the naval maneuvers, known as problem XVII this year, which would leave virtually the entire United States fleet in the Pacific after the battle-studies next May in west Central American waters.

Policies Changed.

This is in line with recent Navy policies, although until four years ago approximately one-half of the fleet was kept in the Atlantic.

Three cruisers only, the U. S. S. Indianapolis, Astoria and New Orleans, and two destroyer divisions, composed of 14 vessels, will pass through the Panama Canal to visit Atlantic ports for overhaul and training purposes.

Naval circles stated the visit of these vessels to the Atlantic was purely routine. Speculation, however, went on in some quarters on the significance of retaining in the Pacific such a large proportion of the fleet at the time the Japanese delegation was leaving the naval conference.

In the meantime it was learned that the Navy Department may shortly ask Congress for new funds for the construction of capital ships. The modernization of two battleships or the construction of one would be sought in such a move, it was said.

This counld be done upon expiration of the Washington and London treaties at the end of 1936, and would be in addition to the present Navy program, which would build the fleet to full treaty strength by 1942.

Washington Reaction.

The Washington reactions other than that of Secretary Hull included something of a stir on Capitol Hill, where Senator Key Pittman (Democrat), of Nevada, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, immediately said that attempts to curb naval re-armaments were "futile."

He commented:

"Withdrawal of Japan makes it impossible for the United States to enter into any agreement with anyone for reduction of its naval program.

"Japan has presented no sound argument for the maintenance of a navy as large as that of the United States. The area to defend by Japan is far less than one-tenth of the coast line required to be protected by the United States. It is evident that Japan intends to enter upon the immediate enlargement of her fleet."

He added that the United States could not understand "Japan's desire for so large a fleet."

Secretary Swanson said that he "concurred" with Mr. Davis in the outright rejection of the Japanese request for the common upper limit, or naval parity with Great Britain and the United States. He added, when questioned on possible moves by the American Navy to meet contingencies of the Japanese actions:

"The Navy never meets a contingency until it arises. It has not changed its program—yet."

Costs Estimated.

Preliminary estimates of the costs of a new battleship to replace one of the seven retired by the treaty age limit at the end of 1936 would be about $50,000,000, it was said. Modernization would cost from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000. These sums would be additional to the budget figure of $243,000,000 for the 1937 fiscal year to continue building 94 vessels now under construction.

The effort to increase the Naval Reserve forces by 100,000 officers and men meanwhile was under way in the Naval Affairs Committee, which, headed by Representative Delaney, New York Democrat, prepared to start hearings today on a bill seeking such expansion.

This bill is believed to have Administration approval. The Naval Reserve present strength is set at about 8,900 officers and 33,255 men. A special Navy Board report filed with the committee asks a maximum peace strength of 16,000 officers and 152,000 men in the Naval Reserve, and 2,650 officers and 35,200 men in the Marine Reserve.

Another move to strengthen the national defense came with the formal report of Secretary of War George H. Dern that the War Department plans to take delivery in 1936 of more than 500 fighting planes.

an unbending resistance to Tokyo's claims, which delegates asserted tended to complete absolute Japanese control of the Far East.

An American spokesman said:

"We will join a four-power conference because we do not want a naval race.

"Naturally we will have to consider a provision for some contingency in case Japan or some other power starts building.

"There will probably be some escape clause in any agreement the four powers may reach so as to take care of any such contingency. Although the four powers are continuing without Japan, it is hoped later on they (the Japanese) will see fit to join in some way and perhaps return."

Admiral Nagano said:

"Allocation of an inferior ratio is so detrimental to our national prestige that it is bound to produce serious repercussions in our country, being a source of permanent and profound discontent to our people.

"Since other delegations have made it clear they cannot accept our proposal for a common upper limit, no other choice is left for us than to leave the conference."

British Views Given.

The British position, it was said in authoritative quarters, was that while she has responsibilities in European waters, the Atlantic, Indian and Pacific oceans, she was asked to uphold all those responsibilities with a fleet no larger than that of a country concerned with one, or at the most two, of these seas.

Norman H. Davis, head of the American delegation, in replying to the Japanese statement of position, said:

"The United States has been most desirous of reaching a new agreement for the reduction or limitation of naval armaments.

"While we greatly appreciate the clear exposition of the Japanese point of view as presented by Admiral Nagano, the discussions have, if anything, served to strengthen our conviction that the principle of a common upper limit would not serve as the basis for negotiation of an agreement.

"The Japanese have proposed at this conference to establish a level for naval armaments which no contracting power might exceed.

"They expressed hope that the agreed limit should be so low as to require a substantial reduction by Japan.

"This would require powers having larger than the limit to scrap or sink many ships to reach this common upper limit.

"It also would permit contracting powers having smaller navies to build up to the common level.

Old System, He Says.

"While Japan has objected to continuance of the so-called ratio system, their proposal for a common upper limit is in fact not abandonment but continuance of the ratio system on the basis of parity, without taking into account the varying needs of the countries concerned.

"We believe it has been sufficiently shown in the course of our discussions that equality of naval armament not only is not the same as equality of security, but that the two are incompatible and contradictory. Equal armaments do not insure equal security.

"Equality of security, as recognized and established at the Washington conference, can mean only superiority of defense in each country's own waters. The defense depends only in part on actual naval strength.

"The Japanese delegation stated one of the objects of their proposal is 'to create a state of non-aggression and non-menace.' We are convinced that this state now exists among the signatories of the naval treaties.

"Bearing in mind the situation in the Far East, Europe and Africa, the United States is not willing to consent to any change which would lessen its relative security, particularly in the absence of greater assurance than we now have that to do so would promote peace and establish a regime of non-menace and non-aggression."

R. F. C. Permits Bankers to Aid Maine Central

Advises Railroad President That Private Offer at 4% Is Reasonable.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation stepped aside yesterday to allow a group of bankers, headed by Kidder, Peabody & Co., to work out a refinancing plan for the Maine Central Railroad, involving $20,000,000.

The RFC has consistently aided railroad refinancing at a lower rate of interest than that offered by bankers, recently offering 4 per cent against bankers' charges of 5 per cent in many instances.

Yesterday Jesse H. Jones, RFC chairman, revealed in a published exchange of correspondence with E. S. French, of the Main Central, that the offer of the Kidder, Peabody group had been approved. This offer is to refinance the purchase of $13,946,097 of ten-year sinking fund bonds at 4 per cent, secured by a first mortgage on the principal part of the owned railroad lines. Approximately $2,425,000 of this money will be used to pay present indebtedness of the Maine Central to the RFC. Besides the 4 per cent interest, a discount or distributing charge of 2½ per cent is made.

Mr. Jones' letter to Mr. French states:

"We have been glad to assist and co-operate with you in meeting this maturity, but feel that this offer by your bankers is reasonable, and it is entirely agreeable with this corporation for you to deal with the bankers, relieving us of the necessity of taking any of the new bonds."

Ten million dollars of the total will be in new bonds and the other $10,000,000 will be handled in cash, said RFC officials.

Cummings and Farley Teas Attract Throngs

Diplomats and Wives Among Society Folk Who Turn Out Despite Downpour for "At Homes" During Afternoon.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Capital society played in bad luck again yesterday as they started out to make the round of Cabinet calls, which yesterday was limited to Mrs. Homer S. Cummings, wife of the Attorney General, and Mrs. James A. Farley, wife of the Postmaster General. But the weather did not prevent society from turning out in full force to make these calls. The drive to Ruthven, the Cummings' beautiful home on the edge of Rock Creek Park was crowded with handsome cars from 4 o'clock until long after 6 and a real reception was had at the front door, where departing guests waited for their motors and in the meantime chatted with the new arrivals.

Inside it was warm and cheery, the lovely drawing room where Mrs. Cummings received being filled with flowers, calla lilies in great crystal bowls, bright carnations in tall vases and yellow snapdragons against the walls paneled in golden-brown wood. Mrs. Cummings was assisted in receiving by Mrs. Stanley Reed, wife of the Solicitor General, and Mrs. James W. Morris, wife of one of the Assistant Attorneys General. The hostess wore an afternoon gown of ruby red crepe fashioned with long sleeves, a square neckline marked with jeweled clips, and a corsage of orchids and lilies of the valley. Mrs. Reed was in a gown of black trimmed with soft olive green, and a smart black hat, while Mrs. Morris wore black trimmed with a gilet of pale pink and a brimmed hat of black velour.

In the dining room, more calla lilies in a crystal globe decorated the tea table, with tall green candles and gleaming silver. A number of Cabinet hostesses assisted at the tea and coffee urns, and another group assisted in the dining room.

Diplomats, Wives Attend.

Wives of numerous diplomats and officials were present, among whom were Mme. Sokolowska, wife of the Charge d'Affaires of Poland, wearing a costume of black trimmed with Persian lamb; Mme. Kulikowska-Higersberger, sister of the second secretary of the Polish Embassy, also in black with a short jacket of Persian lamb; Mme. de Laboulaye, wife of the Ambassador of France, with her daughter, Mlle. Marie Therese de Laboulaye; Mrs. Peter Gerry, handsome wife of Rhode Island's Senator, who wore a dark green hat and a coat of grey Krimmer; Frau Lietner, wife of the Counselor of the German Embassy; Frau Scholz, wife of the first secretary, and Frau Blackenhorn, wife of the new secretary, all three wearing black.

Also present were the Ambassador of Turkey, Mr. Mehmet Munir Ertegun, and the Minister of Egypt, Mr. Youssef; Mme. Peter, wife of the Minister of Switzerland, in black trimmed with crisp touches of white; Mme. Bostrom, wife of the Minister of Sweden, accompanied by Baroness Beck-Friis, wife of the Counselor of the Legation, and the Minister of the Union of South Africa and Mrs. Ralph W. Close.

Mrs. Cordell Hull, who was among those pouring, looked very smart in a tricorne hat of black beaver, with a black woolen ensemble. Mrs. Claude A. # Beauty Expert Gives Advice On Skin Care

Mme. Colbo Explains Use of Glamorous Make-Up in Store Here.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

YOU know the minute you see her that she has something interesting to tell you. She has that kind of face, and manner.

Mysterious, a little, and glamorous too. Russian by birth, French by education, cosmopolite by custom, and American by preference, it's only natural that she'd have things to say and a way of saying them that would win the most reluctant listener.

As a matter of fact, she has more sane, sound knowledge about care of the skin than anyone we've met in a long time. And in regards to make-up—there seems to be no trick she doesn't know!

Lots of women look older than they are, she says, all because they don't know the simple little things they should about applying rouge and lipstick, and powder. Lots of them give no more thought to adapting make-up to their personality than they do to scrambling eggs or boiling water. If they have dry skin, well, they have dry skin. It doesn't occur to them that there's a make-up especially for such skins, a make-up that gives a moist, youthful effect and benefits the complexion at the same time.

Mme. Colbo—that is her name—is in Washington at this time to explain this new scientific system of make-up. You'll find her in a large downtown store, where she is receiving callers all this week, discussing the care of the skin, and in particular this glamorous new make-up.

Timepiece Bags.

Coiffure Net.

ALL the snug-fitting sureness of an aviatrix flying helmet is contained in a new coiffure retaining cap made of French net. It is invaluable for keeping milady's curls intact while she is asleep or during the process of changing her outfit.

Although the cap comes in just one size, it is adjustable (because of the elastic in back) to any head size and gently but ever so firmly prevents the disarray of one's coiffure.

To put it on, stretch the elastic at the back by catching hold at each end. The forehead goes in first, then the rest of the head. Tie the streamers under the chin or back at the nape of the neck.

Nautical Jewelry.

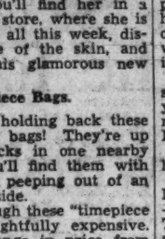
NAUTICAL and very, very nice is the not-to-be-resisted cruise jewelry which has just arrived in a downtown store, and is now attractively arrayed on a counter there.



Patriotic is the color scheme of red, white and blue. Literally reeking of the briny deep are the designs. In pins, clips, bracelets and necklaces, you find yachts, anchors, cars and fish!

One outstanding model is the bracelet with ship signal dangles. Another is the necklace with the ship wheel pendant—or anchor, if you prefer.

Essence of the Pines.

REEKING with the fragrance of a pine forest is the especially fine imported essence selling in an F street store.

It hasn't the dainty floral sweetness nor exotic, haunting scent that women like. Instead, it has a virile, out-of-doors aroma that speaks of mountains, woods, wild spots and soft breezes blowing through pine forests.

Men like this pine essence because it has pick-me-up qualities. A spoonful in a tub of warm water and the weariest man alive feels like a new person.

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

A GAY young couple who live in a tiny new apartment don't know what they're missing in not having a gracious, leisurely dining room. That is—not till they've expanded to larger quarters where there is a dining room. Then they enjoy it twice as much! Because it takes a real dining room to collect a family in . . . "The idea of furnishing a fresh, new room is almost as much fun as planning our first living room," one bride of several years ago sparkled over a handful of newspaper ads about dining room furniture. "But we can't decide on the style. What would you suggest?" . . . The ads all heralded the grand values available in furniture around this time of the year. But one appealed particularly—a Queen Anne suite of walnut, solidly made and yet graceful. With it we suggested a plain dusty blue rug of nubby textured quality, walls in soft ivory, draperies of linen with coppery tones in the pattern. Then accessories and accents in silver.

WAS IT MURDER?

By JAMES HILTON

Colin Revell is called by Robert Roseveare, headmaster of Oakington School which Revell attended before he went to Oxford, to help solve a mystery. Robert Marshall, younger brother of Wilbraham, head-prefect at the school, and cousin of Mr. Ellington, one of the housemasters, was found dead one morning in his dormitory, his skull pierced by an old gas light fixture that had fallen on him. The death was declared accidental by the police. Roseveare's suspicions were aroused when he found a note, written by the boy the night before he died, leaving all his belongings "if anything should happen," to his brother Wilbraham, excepting a bicycle, which was to go to a friend, Jones Tertius. Revell is to have breakfast with Ellington.

CHAPTER IV.

SUNDAY AT OAKINGTON in Revell's time had always been a depressing day. No cooked foods were served from the kitchen; all newspapers (except religious weeklies) were removed from the school reading room; no boy could leave the grounds without special permission; games and gramophones were alike forbidden; three chapel services had to be attended, and it was also a day of compulsory black suits, shoes and ties.

To Revell, comfortably dozing while the chapel bell importunately rang for the first service, there came the jumbled memories of some hundred or so of such days. Not that he had an unhappy time at school. But there was an unholy glee to be derived from lying between warm sheets and thinking of the Oakington multitude shivering in its pews on a December morning with the prospects of nothing but cold brawn for breakfast.

After a little delay he got up, enjoyed the steamiest of hot baths, dressed and went downstairs. The butler met him with a reminder of his breakfast engagement with Mr. Ellington. He nodded and walked out through the porch into the chill wintry air. Ellington's house, viewed from where he was, presented the appearance of a suburban villa leaning coyly against the massive flanks of School House.

Revell walked briskly across the quadrangle, climbed the short flight of steps, and rang the doorbell. A woman's voice from the interior called "Come in!" He entered and waited a few seconds in the hall. The voice again cried "Come in!"—whereupon, fired with a little determination, he walked over to the room from which the sound had seemed to proceed and boldly pushed open the door. He found himself immediately in the presence of a dark-haired, bright-eyed little woman almost pretty, who was frying rashers of bacon at a gas cooker.

"Oh, I'm so sorry," she stammered, seeing him. "I thought—I thought you might be the boy bringing the milk . . . Oh, do forgive me . . . I suppose you are Mr. Revell?"

Revell smiled and admitted that he was.

"I really am most awfully sorry. My husband's in chapel, you know—he'll be here in a few minutes. The servants all go to chapel, too, so I have to get the breakfast myself on Sundays. I hope you'll excuse me."

"Rather," answered Revell, gaily, turning on the torrent of chatter he held in reserve for such occasions. "I love cooking and kitchens, as a matter of fact. If I'd been old enough to go to the war, there's only one thing I'd have wanted to be—a batman. The morning miracle of ham and eggs."

An Old School Custom.

"Yes," she interrupted, "cooking is rather fun. And Molly prefers it to going to chapel, I know, but we—or rather, my husband—has to insist on her going to the first service even if she misses the others. It's an old school custom, I suppose."

"I wonder," said Revell, with that air of slightly cynical abstraction that always or nearly always interested women, "is Oakington really old enough to have any old customs?"

"I don't know." She was, he perceived, out of her depth. But his spirits rose as he contemplated her; she would at least relieve the concentrated boredom of a breakfast with Ellington. Ellington, in fact, appeared on the scene almost at that moment. "Sorry to keep you waiting," he grunted, and to his wife he added, rather sharply: "Why didn't you show Mr. Revell into the drawing room?"

Eyeing her a little later across the breakfast table, Revell guessed her to be anything between 20 and 30 years younger than her husband. Vivacious in a shy, limited kind of way, she talked a good deal about nothing in particular, and Revell, as he had expected, found her animated chatter a pleasant antidote to Ellington's ponderous small talk.

Rain and Fog.

It began to rain toward the end of the meal. "Bad time of the year for a visit," commented Ellington. "Nothing but rain and fog. Been a pretty bad term altogether, in fact." Revell waited to see if this were to be a prelude to some remark about the Marshall affair; and so, perhaps, it might have been but for the sudden intrusion, amidst numerous jocund apologies, of a small statured, red faced, cheerylooking person whom Ellington introduced as "our padre-Capt. Daggat." The two seemed on good terms; Ellington made Daggat take a cup of coffee, although the latter insisted that he had already breakfasted. "Snug little place, this, eh?" he said, winking at Revell. "Not so bad being a married housemaster." He sat down at the table and dominated the talk by sheer fatuousness. He made foolish jokes with Mrs. Ellington, talked shop with Ellington himself, and addressed Revell from time to time with that slangy familiarity which a certain type of parson cultivates in the belief that it makes people feel "at home" with him. Toward 10 o'clock, when Ellington had to rush away to take a class in scripture, Revell made polite excuses to go but Daggat hung on to him mercilessly. "Come along, old chap. You'll enjoy a stroll round the old place, even if it is raining. Good-bye, Mrs. Ellington, and many thanks . . . Seen our War Memorial Hall yet, Revell?"

Daggat Induced to Talk.

Despairingly Revell allowed himself to be piloted from place to place, hoping that in due course, and preferably without prompting, Daggat would talk about the dormitory tragedy. When at length he suggested "a pipe and a pow-wow in my snuggery," Revell agreed willingly enough. The snuggery proved to be on the first floor of the main school house block; it was the usual room affected by such an occupant, with its wide-open windows and languishing fire, its sporting trophies, its hackneyed reproductions of too famous paintings, and its mantelpiece full of fixture cards. Pinned to the wall by the fireplace was the list of preachers in Oakington School chapel during the current term. Revell glanced at it. "So you're on duty today?" he commented.

"Yes. They usually book me for the beginning and end of term."

"I hope I'm not taking up your time when you'd rather be preparing?"

"Oh, not in the least, my dear chap. I always preach extempore. Often I don't even know my subject till I get into the pulpit. It's the only way. Once let the fellows feel that you're not speaking straight from the heart and you lose grip on them. Don't you think so?"

Revell answered vaguely. He was thinking, as a matter of fact, about Mrs. Ellington, and idly speculating upon how and where she had met Ellington, what in him had attracted her, and whether they had been married long. Daggat roused him from such problems by asking what years he had been at Oakington.

"I was here during the war. 'Fifteen to '18. Some of the servants' faces I seem to remember. But apart from that, everyone's a stranger." He added: "I gather there was something like a clean sweep when the new head came?"

Daggat nodded. "I came in '23—a year after the head. I heard stories, of course, of what things had been like before . . .

Tragedy Is Discussed.

They chatted on, coming at length to reminiscences of particular boys whom Revell had known in his time and whose younger relatives were still at Oakington. It was easy, in such a connection, to mention Marshall, and Daggat was only too eager to discuss the tragedy. "I suppose you read about it at the time?" he queried, and Revell allowed him to presume so. "Ah, a terrible business. Queer thing, when you come to think about it, that a gas-thingumbob should come crashing down just when a boy's head is underneath it. Providence, of course—that's all one can say. As I've told the school in my sermons time and time again—we never know. With all our modern science and invention—with all our much vaunted——"

A sharp tap on the door panel interrupted a peroration whose conclusion seemed reasonably predictable. "Come in!" yelled Daggat, in a high-pitched, sing-song tenor. The door opened a few inches and a man's voice deep toned and rather cultivated, murmured: "Sorry, Daggat—didn't know you were busy. Any other time will do."

Daggat jumped up hastily. "No, don't go. Lambourne—we're only chatting. Come in and meet Mr. Revell—he's an Old Boy."

Cruel Methods Of Punishment Defeat Purpose

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

WHEN SUSY was naughty she was generally put into the closet as a punishment. The closet was dark, and before long darkness was connected in her mind with discomfort and unhappiness. Small wonder that all her life she disliked and feared the dark.

The object of removing a child from the scene of his naughtiness is not to frighten him, but to distract his attention from what he is doing, and to distract attention from him.

Corrective Punishment.

There may be occasions when the child must suffer, must endure pain for what he has done, but only if there is in the penalty a definite thought of future benefit. All punishment should point ahead and be constructive. It should be a corrective, not a penalty.

To shut a child in a dark closet has no better effect than to put him into another room, well lighted, where he is alone and unable to repeat his mischief. Let him play if he likes.

Confinement Dangerous.

Solitary confinement with nothing to do is dangerous for any child and especially an angry one. No normal child will put in his time of imprisonment thinking over his misdeeds and plannng repentance and reform.

Darkness should not even be used as a threat. To teach a child to connect darkness with unpleasantness even subconsciously is sure in the end to make him fear it. Such a punishment or threat does more harm than good every time.

Care Is Needed In Child's Diet To Keep Health

Proper Food Habits in Early Life Serve as Bulwark Against Disease.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

PROPER food habits must be established early in life. When the youngster begins to run about there is danger that he may be—well, not forgotten but just overlooked. We have the feeling that he is now getting around under his own power. On the contrary, we cannot cast aside—wholly—the precautions so slavishly observed during infancy. There is no unimportant period in childhood. While strong men may develop despite a weak childhood, the reverse is the rule. Childhood constitutions usually carry over into adult life.

Malnutrition is not a disease, but it does indicate that something is wrong, and attention should be paid to the height-weight-age tables in every year of life. To keep the weight within normal limits will help prevent the onset of disease and serve as a bulwark of resistance should it appear.

It is rather curious that the age period between 3 and 5 has received so little consideration.

Regular Eating.

Food problems in this age period are basically health problems. At the outset the child should be accustomed to a variety of tastes, care being taken that good food is not spoiled in cooking. Children should not be permitted to acquire a longing for fried, greasy foods, pastries, too much sugar, spiced foods, or stimulants such as tea, coffee, etc.

Here are some practical suggestions that may be of value. (1) Encourage regular periods of eating. (2) Serve food in small portions with a second helping if desired. (3) Make the meal period happy—one that is looked forward to with anticipation. The nagging mother who is constantly correcting the child about eating habits defeats her objective. (4) No cake between meals, although a glass of milk is often desirable. (5) Too much butter, cream and sugar lessens appetite. (6) In cooking vegetables save vitamins and minerals by preparing them with little or no water.

FAVORITE Foods Of famous folk

By Pattie Ellicott.

VISITORS at the first at home this season of Mrs. Henry V. Morgenthau, wife of the Secretary of the Treasury, were enchanted to find on the tea table a novel and appetizing tid bit in the form of tiny fish balls served piping hot on tooth picks.

The use of fish balls at formal tea tables is a new note in culinary fashion that will be copied widely now that the genial wife of the Treasury Secretary, one of the most charming women in official circles, has set the pace by including them in her own tea menu. Just as the angel food cake served at the tea table of Mrs. Daniel C. Roper, wife of the Secretary of Commerce, put visitors in an Oliver Twist frame of mind, longing for "more, more" so those Morgenthau fish balls were an epicurean high spot in the round of at homes, a pastime to which all Washington is addicted in the season.

MRS. MORGENTHAU,

Tea Table Fish Balls.

Qualifications for Membership in P. E. O. Are Discussed Today.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: What credentials must a person have in order to become a member of the P. E. O. organization? Thanking you for any information, I am, most sincerely.

MRS. W. T. C.

DEAR MRS. W. T. C. Members of the P. E. O. make their own selection of candidates, choosing from among their friends and acquaintances those women who appeal to them as most nearly representative of ideal womanhood. It is an honor which comes to the candidate without her seeking it. There is no initiative she may take in the matter.

Miss Laura Hansen, Kew Gardens, Apartment 217, telephone POtomac 5560, is State president of P. E. O. for the District of Columbia, and you may put your question to her, if you like. Her office telephone number, by the way, is NAtional 1926. On January 21 the P. E. O. will be celebrating the sixty-seventh anniversary of Founders' Day and by watching the newspapers prior to and on that date, you will no doubt find interesting accounts of the organization's origin and development. It has a national enrollment today of 63,000 members.

M. H.

School of Agriculture.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: Can you tell me if there is a school in the District of Columbia offering instruction in agriculture for women? Or if there is some way of obtaining material which could be studied at home? I would much appreciate any information you can give me. Thanking you, I am,

MRS. J. L.

• • • •

DEAR MRS. J. L.: The University of Maryland at College Park, Md., 8 miles from Washington on streetcar, bus and train routes, offers a co-educational course of study in Agriculture. Write the registrar's office, or telephone GReenwood 1660, and ask for literature outlining the course. The next semester starts February 3. So far as I can learn, there are no such classes of study offered by schools in the District of Columbia.

Wants Stamps Appraised.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I have quite a few old stamps which I should like to have appraised. They have been pasted, rather sloppily, in an old account book. I can't remount them without injuring them. Do you know of some qualified appraiser who wouldn't mind looking over a lot of messy stamps? They are cancelled. I am willing to pay a small fee. Sincerely,

MISS F. W.

• • • •

DEAR MRS. F. W.: Take your collection of stamps to a stamp dealer for appraisal. Following are the names and address of two: Mr. H. A. Robinette, fifth floor of the Washington Loan & Trust Building, Ninth and F streets northwest; and Mr. A. H. Whitney, 402 Twelfth street northwest (opposite the Raleigh Hotel). It might be well to get the opinion of both. No fee will be expected.

• • • •

Sculptor of Primitives Finds Beauty Is Relative

Malvina Hoffman, Here to Open Exhibition, Relates Trials and Hardships in Tour of Curious Far Corners of the Earth.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

WOMAN'S BEAUTY is a relative matter. Geography has a good deal to do with it. In Burma, for example, a long neck circled with the greatest number of brass rings is what counts. In Central Africa, among the Duck Billis, the length and breadth of the lips are determining factors, while in Hokkaido—an island north of Japan—loveliness is measured by the extent of the tattooed "smile" that circles the lips and stretches toward the ears.

These are some observations of Miss Malvina Hoffman, noted sculptor, whose work has taken her around the world, into the fantastic fastness of the jungle, to islands rarely visited by white men, and into regions where natives had never posed for an artist before.

Miss Hoffman came to Washington recently to attend the opening of her exhibition at the National Geographic Society. Before she returned to New York yesterday she related some of her experiences during the five years she worked on her most comprehensive undertaking, the creation of a number of bronzes depicting the races of man, now in a permanent exhibit in the Field Museum in Chicago.

Tropic Heat, Arctic Cold.

A tall, aristocratic-looking lady with silvery hair and a sense of humor, Miss Hoffman has modeled pigmy women in the heart of Africa when the thermometer registered 120 degrees. In Northern Asia with freezing fingers and icy clay, she turned out heads of Mongol men and women when she wondered how the models themselves kept from turning to ice. "Our trip couldn't be arranged to suit our fancy or according to the weather," she said. "Considering our own comfort was the last thing we thought of."

So braving the elements while they invaded curious corners of the earth, Miss Hoffman and her husband, Samuel B. Grimson, artist and scientist, went about the business of seeking out racial types, and in finding them, they also learned a good deal about the life and habits of half-civilized men and women who eye an approaching white person with suspicion, yet generally yield to the offer of salt, beads, tobacco or chocolate.

Superstitions of primitive peoples proved distinct stumbling blocks in the progress of Miss Hoffman's work, she said. "In numerous cases natives hesitated to pose for us because they were afraid a three-dimensional figure, patterned after them, would be part of them. After my interpreter persuaded a person to pose, I never allowed the subject to get too close to the model I made. And I never filled in the eyes while he watched, after one rather singular experience when a pigmy posing for me walked up to the bust I had made of him, looked at it closely, became frightened and ran away at break-neck speed, never to come back."

It was difficult to get any women of the jungle tribes to pose, she explained. "They are extremely reticent, inclined to stand back and let their husbands take the initiative. I noticed this even among the American Indians," she continued. "When I wanted a woman model, I always made arrangements with her husband."

In Upper Burma, even this plan wasn't successful. Miss Hoffman had to wait until she returned to New York to get a giraffe-necked woman from the circus to pose.

In Bali, however, she had little difficulty. She found the exact type she wanted in the chief temple dancer who didn't mind posing. In Hongkong, a female mud carrier employed in road work was also easily persuaded.

About her plans for the future Miss Hoffman was somewhat vague. A painter for six years before she turned to sculpture, she hopes to find some time now to work with oil and canvas. Recently, however, she has been doing some sketches and colored cartoons. "But most of my time has been taken up with completing my book, 'Heads and Tales,' which comes out next month," she said. "It answers once and for all questions frequently put to me about my work and my experiences."

Minister Declares Back-Patting Men Are Up to No Good

IT'S DANGEROUS for men to pat ladies on the back while shaking their hands, said the Rev. J. L. Schuler to a convention of 150 Seventh Day Adventists held recently in Pittsburgh.

Speaking on the topic "The Proper Decorum Toward the Opposite Sex," the Rev. Schuler warned of the evils of flirting and the dangers of too much intimacy between the sexes.

"When shaking hands with the opposite sex," he said, "don't hold the hand any longer than is necessary for greeting. I always fear for a man who pats a woman on the back while shaking hands. I think it is being free."

Federation Launches Ten-Point Plan to Combat Foreign Orders.

WITH A 10-POINT plan underway to combat foreign "isms"—fascism, communism and socialism—and a program launched to established a National Academy of Public Affairs, Mrs. John L. Whitehurst, of Baltimore, chairman of the education department of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, feels that organized women are making strides toward clearly defined, practical goals.

Yesterday in an interview at headquarters of the federation, Mrs. Whitehurst told something of both projects and, incidentally, revealed some of her ideas about how women can earn an equal opportunity with men in public life.

With an extensive background in organization activity, she is convinced clubwomen can help combat communism "by joining forces with all agencies working to preserve our democracy. It is useless to try alone to fight propaganda of the foreign radical," she said.

She also recommends open forums where public questions can be discussed and current legislation explained, as well as radio broadcasts of forums conducted by well-informed speakers. An Academy of Public Affairs, she feels, would make the spoils system a thing of the past.

"Every administrative, professional, clerical, skilled and unskilled labor level in our Government should be closely tied up with an educational program," she continued. "An Academy of Public Affairs, such as the one proposed by Representative Wesley Disney in a bill introduced to Congress on January 10, would train persons for diplomatic services and for all branches of Government work."

So far as Mrs. Whitehurst knows, Mrs. Lawson, president of the General Federation, was the first to conceive the idea of establishing a school of public affairs.

If the plan conceived by Mrs. Lawson and worked out by Mrs. Whitehurst is endorsed by the 2,000,000 club women in the federation and passes Congress Washington will one day have an institution organized along the line of the Military Academy at West Point and the Naval Academy at Annapolis. "Only instead of offering military training, the Academy of Public Affairs will train men and women for positions in all governmental departments," she explained.

A club leader in Maryland, Mrs. Whitehurst has had a prominent part in the education and legislation in her State for a number of years. She is the only woman ever to be appointed on the board of regents of the University of Maryland and is now serving as secretary of that group. Her appointment was the result of 25 years of work on the part of Maryland feminists to have a woman on the board.

Her two years of experience in that capacity, as well as in other groups where men are in the majority, has proved to her "there is generally a lack of understanding on the part of men regarding the ability of women. While I have been treated with every courtesy since I have been a member of the board of regents, I have noticed where problems concerning women are presented, men tend to consider lightly the competence of those women."

Pie Is Perfect Dessert After Simple Dinner

Butterscotch Is Delicious as Finish to a One-Dish-and-Salad Meal.

By Dorothea Duncan.

PIE MAKES a perfect dessert after a not too heavy dinner. Casserole dishes, for example, where a number of vegetables combined with meat make an ideal contrast for a crisp lettuce salad and a pastry dessert.

Try this recipe for butterscotch pie the next time you plan to serve a one-dish meal and a plain salad. Husbands find it delicious, and if the children are too young to have pastry, make their portion of the filling and serve it topped with meringue minus crust in a pudding dish.

Butterscotch Pie.

4 tablespoons sugar
½ teaspoon salt
1½ cups milk, scalded
4 tablespoons butter
2 egg whites
½ cup corn starch
1 cup maple sirup
2 egg yolks, slightly beaten
1 teaspoon vanilla
4 tablespoons sugar
1 baked nine-inch pie shell

Mix cornstarch, sugar and salt. Add sirup gradually, stirring to a smooth paste. Add to scalded milk in top of double boiler, stirring constantly until mixture thickens. Then cook ten minutes, stirring occassionally. Pour a small amount over egg yolks, stirring vigorously. Return to remaining mixture in double boiler and cook three minutes longer. Remove from fire, add butter and vanilla and cool.

For meringue, beat egg whites until foamy throughout. Add sugar, 2 tablespoons at a time, beat after each addition until sugar is thoroughly blended. After all sugar is added, continue beating until mixture will stand in peaks. Turn cooled pie filling into pie shell. Pile meringue lightly on top. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.) 15 minutes, or until delicately browned.

The President 'Crashes Gate' At Wife's Tea

General Federations' Directors Gather in Winter Session.

For the first time in their lives, 125 members of the board of the General Federation of Women's Clubs sat down to tea with a President of the United States yesterday.

The tea was supposed to have been given them by Mrs. Roosevelt, and it was, but President Roosevelt was there, too, and for 20 minutes chatted with members of the board and with their president, Mrs. Roberta Lawson, of Tulsa, Okla.

Aware of the White House rule against quoting the President, the women declined to reveal what Mr. Roosevelt told them except to say they discussed various phases of the federation welfare program.

Members of the board said the White House tea with the wife of the President was an annual custom, but that never had they been given an opportunity to sit and talk with the President. The President shook hands all around before the women left.

Earlier in the day Government officials, journalists and chairmen of several committees of the General Federation addressed the federation's directors at their annual mid-winter meeting at the organization's headquarters, 1734 N street northwest.

The Government officials—Miss Bertha Nienburg, assistant director of the Women's Bureau; Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward, assistant WPA administrator, and Harold Stein, director of the WPA professional and service projects, assured the directors that women are receiving their full share of benefits under the present administration.

Two Journalists Speak.

The journalists—Merlo J. Pusey, Washington Post editorial writer, and Jesse C. Suter, of the Washington Star, discussed the advisability of national representation for the District on a limited scale.

Mrs. Roberta Campbell Lawson, General Federation president, cautioned the women in her annual address "not to be too hot or too cold in exercising the citizenship responsibilities which rest upon the womanhood of our country."

The federation's committee chairmen, in their reports, touched upon everything from communism and women in politics to the value of happy home life.

Mrs. J. D. Atwood, of Rosewell, N. Mex., chairman of the American citizenship department, reaffirmed the federation's stand on communism when she declared:

Menace to Welfare.

"Teachers in our public schools throughout the country should not be permitted to mention communism in their classrooms. It is an indisputable fact that communism has reached such alarming proportions of growth in certain sections of our country and in many of the educational institutions that we must face it as a serious menace to the future welfare of our Nation.

"We (the general federation) shall continue to oppose it in the belief that an aroused womanhood can accomplish anything upon which it has fixed its determination."

Mrs. Atwood's report also said the federation will "strive to increase the number of women holding seats in Congress and in the State Legislatures without regard to party affiliation."

World's Fate in Homes.

In her speech on homes, Mrs. Norman H. Hastings, of Roslindale, Mass., chairman of the American home department, said:

"The fate of the world lies in the homes of the world. No matter what happens, home life must be maintained and each home should be a haven where one may always find peace and understanding."

Miss Nienburg, of the Women's Bureau, last night told the federation that women are completely justified in seeking work outside the home since "around their special aptitudes have been built machines for factory, store and office and upon their (women's) faithful fulfillment of duties depends the smooth running of much of our industrial or commercial life."

Harold Stein, after describing national projects in the arts being sponsored and directed by the PWA, said the Government and workers alike are wondering if the program is as valuable to the community as it should be. Stein told the Federation's directors yesterday afternoon that only through the interest aroused in each community could the program have any lasting value.

Mrs. Woodward Speaks.

In addition to Miss Nienburg's address, last night's session of the directors included a talk by Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward, assistant WPA administrator in charge of women's work.

Mrs. Woodward reported that "since there has been such a decided upturn in business, we have been receiving many letters showing that women who have improved their skills or learned new skills on our project have recently gotten jobs."

Between the afternoon and evening sessions the clubwomen attending the midwinter board meeting sloshed through the rain to the White House. Mrs. Roosevelt will address them tomorrow night at their dinner in the Chinese room of the Mayflower.

House to Study Traffic Deaths For District

Survey Is Announced After Auto Club Opens Attack.

A comprehensive survey of Washington's traffic problems was ordered yesterday by the House District Committee as the American Automobile Association submitted a 10-point program of attack on the causes of casualties.

The job of conducting the survey, which probably will include a public hearing, was turned over to the sub-committee on streets and traffic, of which Representative Patman (Democrat), of Texas, is chairman.

Patman said that the sub-committee would meet in the next few days and decide the nature of its study. He will be assisted by Representatives Carpenter (Democrat), of Kansas; Wood (Democrat), of Missouri; Fenerty (Republican), of Pennsylvania; Short (Republican), of Missouri, and Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana.

Follows Letter.

The action followed receipt of a letter from the traffic safety committee of the District Motor Club, A. A. A., of which Bishop James E. Freeman is chairman.

"While there was a slight improvement in the fatality trend in the District in 1935," the committee wrote, "the record is still far from encouraging.

"While there are numerous reasons for these conditions, it is patent that one major reason is the new concentration of Federal workers in the so-called 'Triangle' area, a development which has meant much to the city from an esthetic standpoint but which was carried out with little regrd to the transportation problems thus created."

The committee recommended a comprehensive survey with two objectives: (a) To develop methods for obtaining the most efficient and safe use of existing traffic facilities and (b) to provide long-range plans for future traffic needs and the proper integration of these needs with the building program of the city.

More Police Asked.

The other nine recommendations are:

Set up a co-ordinating authority to harmonize the activities of Federal agencies and business and civic organizations.

Strengthen enforcement facilities by increasing personnel of Police Department assigned to traffic duty.

Increase personnel in department of vehicles and traffic.

Ban "fixing" of traffic violation tickets and speed up judicial handling of traffic cases by adding one or more judges.

Stiffen penalties for drunken driving.

Strengthen safety responsibility law by eliminating $100 minimum property damage clause, thus bringing all accidents within the scope of the act.

Conduct periodic and official inspection of motor vehicles.

Improve street and highway lighting.

Autoist Is Fined $30 On 10-Month Charge

He was F. W. Hargrave, 1800 block of Sixteenth street northwest, and was arrigned before Judge Gus A. Schuldt and fined $25 for second offense speeding and $5 for failing to obtain District license plates.

Hargrave was first arrested by Policeman C. E. Rabbitt, of the Traffic Division, ten months ago. He was told to appear in court the following day. He failed to answer the order, Rabbitt said, and a warrant was obtained.

His appearance yesterday was the result of action by an alert clerk, Miss Helen Simms, in the Traffic Division. Efforts to serve the warrant had been futile, Rabbit said. And then Hargrave was arrested by another policeman on the tag count. When Miss Simms heard his name, she checked the file and found he was wanted on the speed charge.

Hargraves was warned by Judge Schuldt that additional offenses would prove more costly.

Philip H. Bath Hurt Seriously In Auto Crash

Philip H. Bath, 35, of the 600 block of Elliott street northeast, was injured seriously in an automobile collision last night at Hamilton and Seventh streets northwest. He was treated at Freedmen's Hospital for a fractured skull, lacerations of hte face and head and possible internal injuries.

Police said Bath was a passenger in a car driven by James L. DeChard, 46, of the 1100 block of Robinson street southwest, which was in collision with a car operated, police said, by Buford B. Bayliss, 21, of the 5300 block of Seventh street northwest. Both drivers were charged with reckless driving.

Nathan Sickle, 72, of the 1000 block of Pennsylvania avenue northwest, suffered a fractured left leg when he was hit by an automobile at Pennsylvania avenue and Seventh streets northwest. He was treated at Casualty Hospital, where he was removed by the driver of the car, John F. Branson, 36, of the 2800 block of K street northwest.

Nellie Cole Smith, 28, of hte 200 block of Second street northwest, was treated at Casualty Hospital for lacerations and shock after being struck by an automobile in front of police headquarters. The car, police said, was driven by William J. Raymon, of the 300 block of F street northwest.

At 8 a. m., the order automatically suspending drivers' permits for first offense speed violations becomes effective.

The new order was announced 10 days ago by Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer. Forms for enforcing the rule were distributed yesterday by Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent.

Pay Day, Rainy, Finds Cars Double-Parked Inexcusably

(Editor's note: In an effort to determine the answer to Washington's present traffic problem, with its mounting toll of accidents, The Post has assigned a reporter to learn the reason behind violations of traffic regulations. A reporter, accompanied by an official of the Police Traffic Division, is cruising in a police car. Motorists who violate the law are stopped. Their side of the story is recorded. It is The Post's desire merely to learn "the reason why" of violations. This is the sixth in a series of stories.)

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Rain came yesterday with slippery streets, and as we cruised through heavy "pay-day" traffic, it wasn't the moving vehicles that caught our eye. It was those that were parked—parked in violation of the law, creating hazards already heightened by mist and drizzling rain.

In a police radio car, with Traffic Division Officers J. R. Milsted and E. W. Condon keeping tabs, we weaved slowly in and out among illegally parked cars on our daily search for "the reason why." And reasons advanced by yesterday's law-breaking drivers were far from excusable—or even plausible.

Speeders and double-parkers are the greatest rainy-day problems. With this in mind, we first toured busy downtown streets. Traffic was heavy along H street northwest. Taxis and busses added to the confusion. Near Fourteenth street, we saw an automobile parked abreast, standing well into the street. The driver was nowhere to be seen. We waited. When he finally appeared (he was an elderly man) Policeman Condon asked him, "Why?"

"I am a law-abiding citizen," said the motorist. "I have never been arrested in my life."

Cars Forced Out.

And then, in the next breath, he "explained" the violation.

"I had to go in that store to make a purchase. There were no parking spaces. I glanced all around and didn't see anyone looking, so I left my car here—but only a minute."

In that "minute," nearly half a dozen cars were forced to swerve into the center of the street to avoid a collision. Others stopped behind the double-parked machine—and the result was a jam. So, Mr. Motorist, who abides by the law" looked around, "didn't see anyone," and decided to take a chance. He admitted he was familiar with local regulations. But, when Policeman Condon asked him for his permit, the motorist pulled a hand full of cards from his pocket and asked:

"Which is the permit—I'm not sure."

We left this thoughtless driver with a stern warning and continued our quest, turning left into downtown traffic. Block after block, similar offenses were observed and the offenders warned. Each one admitted he "knew better." That left only one answer—wilful disobedience.

A few minutes later, we were cruising south on Thirteenth street. Near G street an autoist swung suddenly around in a "U" turn. This type of turn is prohibited by a plentiful scattering of signs.

"Oh, excuse me. I forgot," was his reply to Condon's question of "Why?"

And that was his only excuse. To make it slightly worse, this motorist holds a position in the District government, where, of all places, he should know and observe traffic regulations. Yet, he is one of the reasons for the present problem—the present, disheartening number of traffic dead within a few days of the new year.

The next violator was stopped at Ninth street and New York avenue northwest. is was an honest excuse—logical and well founded.

This motorist was driving his car behind a huge bus. When hte bus reached the center of the intersection, the light changed. The trailing motorist was caught. He could do nothing but cross on the red signal.

"I couldn't see the light because the top of the bus obscured my vision," he explained. And added "These buses should be warned. That one ahead of me apparently crossed on the 'caution' light. What else could I do?"

Amber Light Jumping.

There was nothing else he could do. His suggestion was a good one. We have often watched these heavy buses—both local and interstate—"jump" the warning signals. Which, as the saying goes, reminds me of a story told by Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent:

A motorist was asked what the yellow or amber signal light meant. He replied:

"Go like the dickens to beat the red!"

That may be funny. But to those charged with enforcing the law and to those who have suffered as a part of Washington's traffic toll, it is no joke. It is a fact. The "caution" light means just that—caution in approaching the intersection. A warning to slow down—not to speed up.

Thus far, our quest for the motive behind repeated violatoins has touched nearly every local regulation. In the minor class, double parking heads the list. The average answer is "willful." In the major class, light-jumping and weaving in traffic are tied for first place. And here, the answer is still "willful."

There are also unintentional violations. There are violations which can be laid to carelessness. And there are still others where the motorist actually doesn't know the regulatoins. (These are few.)

Caroline Longfellow, Kin of Poet, Honored

Washington women honored Miss Caroline Longfellow, digestor of patents, last night in the Mayflower Hotel on her fiftieth anniversary as a business woman.

A cake baked in honor of Miss Longfellow was cut at the dinner sponsored by the Zonta Club. Guests included members of the Soroptimist, Quota and Business and Professional Women's Clubs.

Miss Longfellow, a distant relative of the poet, was praised by speakers for pioneer work in her specialized field. Though born in Iowa, most of her professional life has been passed here.

Diners to Hear Baker on Crime Curbs Tonight

With capacity attendance assured, a civic subscription dinner to discuss the establishment of a crime commission for the District will take place at 6:45 p. m. today at the Hotel Mayflower.

The citizens' committee arranging the program, which will feature an address by Newton D. Baker, reported yesterday that all tickets for the dinner had been sold. Persons who sent in reservations, and received neither tickets nor returned checks, were advised to telephone dinner committee headquarters, National 4200, today.

Speaking in his capacity as president of the Cleveland Association for Criminal Justice, Mr. Baker will discuss the functions of such an organization, its place in the community and its possible accomplishments.

The Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, will pronounce the invocation. The business meeting, following the dinner, will be called to order by Eugene Meyer, publisher of The Washington Post, as chairman of the crime commission dinner committee.

Other speakers will be Justin Miller, chairman of the Attorney General's advisory committee on crime, and James M. Hepbron, managing director of the Baltimore Criminal Justice Commission. Their subjects are, respectively, "Civic Responsibility in Combating Crime" and "Organizing, Financing and Managing a Criminal Justice Commission."

Salvation Army Holds Old-Time Rally in Street

British Leader Addresses Later Gathering at E Street Temple.

Work of the Salvation Army in many lands was described by Commissioner Charles Jeffries, of London, in a talk at a united meeting of the army last night in the temple at 606 E street northwest.

Preceding the session, a huge old-time Salvation Army street meeting was held at Eighth and E streets northwest under direction of Maj. Harry L. Purdum.

Maj. Purdum had gathered about 40 workers with a 35-piece band. The scene was reminiscent of days before the Community Chest, when the army raised its funds by direct street appeal.

Commissioner Jeffries was accompanied to Washinton by Lieut. Commissioner Ernest I. Pugmire, commanding the Southern territory; Maj. Sidney Cox, territorial young people's secretary, and Maj. Vincent Cunningham, editor of The War Cry.

Maj. James Asher, divisional commander, presided and introduced Commissioner Pugmire, who, in turn, introduced Commissioner Jeffries.

The British officer, who once commanded the army throughout the British Isles, told of his experiences in Australia, China and other points where he had pioneered in Salvation Army work.

Central Student Gas Suicide Fearing Examination Failure

Joseph E. Williams, 18-year-old student at Central High School, died yesterday afternoon on the stove in the kitchen of his apartment home at 1151 New Jersey avenue where he had made a bed over open gas jets.

Before leaving for school he told his mother he was afraid he would not pass a coming examination and would have to remain at school six more months. He was to complete his fourth year in Central High School in February.

He was found by his mother, Mrs. Maude M. Ryan, employed at the General Accounting Division of the Treasury Department, when she returned to the apartment about 5:15 p. m. from work.

The boy laid a mattress on a table so that it extended over the gas burners, police said, turned on the gas and lay down to die.

The mother called police and a fire rescue squad ambulance crew worked over the boy for 15 minutes before he was given up for dead.

In the note to the mother, police said the boy asked her forgiveness and expressed his appreciation for all she had done for him.

Police said the youth was Mrs. Ryan's son by a former marriage to Sergt. James Williams, former White House policeman.

Desire for Economy, Malnourishment Are Factors.

Needy Aid to Continue Through the Years, Is Belief.

Frederick W. McReynolds, chairman of the Board of Public Welfare, yesterday laid down a three-point program which shall guide the board in administering public relief.

Desire of the taxpayer for economy was listed first by McReynolds. The person who needs public assistance was listed next and third was protection of the "community as a whole against the evils which are bred now and for the future by poverty, malnourishment and degradation."

The statement of McReynolds was issued as a formal response to the action of the District Commissioners the day before turning over administration of public relief to the board. The action of the Commissioners was on recommendation of Commissioner George E. Allen, works and relief administrator.

Withdrawal of Federal funds, Commissioner Allen said, had made it imperative that the District put its relief administration in the hands of a permanent municipal agency because the problems of relief would continue through the years.

Between $500,000 and $600,000, McReynolds said, must be obtained by Congress out of District funds to carry forward the relief load during the remainder of the current year.

The public assistance committee of the board is to meet on Wednesday. At that time it is to canvass the situation and formulate a program which will be submitted to a meeting of the full Board of Public Welfare January 28. Following that meeting the board's program is to be submitted to the Commissioners, who already are privately committed to the need for more money to carry the relief load through the year.

Transfer of the administration of relief to the board is not intended to make any difference to individual relief cases. Elwood Street, director of public welfare, has been in close touch with Commissioner Allen and with Miss M. Alice Hill, director of emergency relief. No change in policy is contemplated, it is said. Neither is there to be any requirement for registration of relief clients. The lists are to be left as they are, except for normal day to day changes.

Board Responsibility.

The board accepted responsibility for administration of public relief, Mr. McReynolds said, "with all humility and a solemn sense of obligation." He paid tribute to the manner in which Commissioner Allen has administered relief during the two years he has been in office.

"As a group of citizens, non-partisan, unpaid, and charged by law with the administration of various institutions and agencies under its direction," Mr. McReynolds continued, "the Board of Public Welfare will do its utmost to see that the District of Columbia relief and public assistance services are carried on with the fullest regard for the desire of the taxpayer for economy, of the person who needs public assistance for aid according to that need, and of the community as a whole for protection against the evils which are bred now and for the future by poverty, malnourishment and degradation."

"In undertaking this full responsibility we are aware also that it could not be assumed with any prospect of any degree of satisfaction to ourselves or to the community were it not for the fine, loyal and devoted staff which has been built up in the Public Assistance Division in the last three years or more of its service.

The plain facts must be faced that there are thousands of people now unemployed and on relief who cannot be reabsorbed into the normal economic life of the District of Columbia as it is now set up, has been set up in the recent past or is likely to be set up in the immediate future. We must plan, therefore, not merely for relief of those who are in distress, but also for the rehabilitation."

May Robson, Veteran Actress, Scores Beyond Worth of Picture on Belasco Screen

Executes Fine Impersonation Of Benefactor

'Richest Woman in World' Is Real 'Queen' to Lowly Kids.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"THREE KIDS AND A QUEEN." Universal picturization of a story by Harry Poppe and Chester Bezcroft, adapted to the screen by Barry Trivers and Sam Ornitz, starring May Robson, with Frankie Darro, Henry Armetta, Charlotte Henry, Hermen Bing, Lillian Harmer, William Benedict, Tom Dugan, John Milian, Lawrence Grant, Hedda Hopper, Hale Hamilton and Henry Kolker. Directed by Edward Ludwig. Reviewed Wednesday afternoon.

There is that about the work of May Robson on the screen that inspires the same sort of respect that attended everything that was done before the cameras by the late Marie Dressler.

Miss Robson is one of those revered grande dames of the theater who unfailingly command the admiration of the youngsters who hope, some time, to achieve a comparable distinction.

"Three Kids and a Queen" is not Miss Robson's supreme artistic attainment. I should say that "Lady For a Day" was a better picture. But the present subject, nevertheless, is such as to reveal, in broad strokes and vivid colors, the far reaches of the skill that has been built up through long years of service on the playboards.

May Robson is no tyro, hoping to catch the eye of some director who knows far less than she about the intricacies of the theater.

She is a schooled and disciplined artiste who knows her way about and can give cards and spades, to coin a phrase, to those who attempt to match her in technical proficiency.

Star Transcends Play.

So "Three Kids and a Queen" becomes less a matter of individual stardom than it does one of general story value. Miss Robson may be taken for granted. Perhaps not so much can be said for her present vehicle.

To be frank about it, I suspect that there are too many dramatic elements merged into this fantastic tale to make it a model of dramaturgic perfection.

We have here a bit of alleged kidnaping, a splash of gangsterism and machine gunning, a bit of sentimental piffle, having to do with small and crippled children, and a "lunacy hearing" scene that appropriates many of the outworn qualities of the old "courtroom scene," when legal drama was at its zeninth.

But there is a wealth of comedy in "Three Kids and a Queen." The story of the "richest woman in the world"—which might be fashioned remotely and vaguely after the obscure pattern of the lives of the Wendell sisters on Fifth avenue in New York—is enlivened by the dialectic absurdities of both Henry Armetta, foremost of the Italian twisters of English, and that masterful Germanic buffoon, who makes his work an art by taking it so seriously, Herman Bing. That name alone is almost enough!

On the side of the juvenile appeal of the play we have the mature talents of the youthful Frankie Darro, the amazing precocity of William Barrud and the equally effective juvenility of Charlotte Henry and William Benedict.

Not the least of the stellar actors in the cast is that priceless spaniel that was Flush in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" and now takes the part of "Aubrey" with that complete assumption of unconscious grandeur that only a true artist can embrace. Whatever this dog's real name is, I doff the last year's Knox to him as an actor of the first water.

Auxiliaries Not So Many.

The supporting bill is not quite so pretentious as usual this week at the Belasco.

There is a considerably garbled print of a pictorial life of Stephen Foster and his works that misses a beat now and again and omits many of its lines and lyrics when inexplicable deletions seem to have been made; a holdover issue of the Pathe News, in which President Roosevelt delivers excerpts from his famous Congressional stump speech; a "Port o' Call" travel subject, having to do with "Children of the Nile," and a recorded recessional.

Among the Foster songs you will probably be glad to hear reasonably well sung by a tenor, soprano and Negro ensemble are "Poor Uncle Ned," "Come Where My Love Lies Dreaming," "My Old Kentucky Home," "Ole Black Joe" and "Oh, Susanna."

The bill adds up to an appreciable measure of A-1 entertainment. That uncannily human spaniel would make any bill better than the average run!

Columbia

"AH, WILDERNESS." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the stage play, adapted to the screen by Frances Goodrich and Albert Hackett, featuring Lionel Barrymore, Wallace Beery, Eric Linden, Cecelia Parker, Spring Byington, Mickey Rooney, Charles Grapewin, Frank Albertson, Edward Nugent, Bonita Granville and Helen Flint. Directed by Clarence Brown.

This story of a simple, middle-class household in a small, New England village is one that deserves to be perpetuated on the downtown, first-run screen.

As first presented on the living stage, it was an eloquent and moving recital of some of the most precious memories cherished by Eugene O'Neill, its author.

George M. Cohan, in the role of the understanding father, created no less than a sensation by his faithful assumption of a role that might easily have been ruined by careless playing.

Now, on the screen, Lionel Barrymore makes of the same part the same sort of monument to honest and painstaking acting.

Linden Stages Comeback.

Eric Linden, as the wayward son, addicted to "advanced" authors and poets, does much to salvage a career that seemed, somehow, to have stagnated. Spring Byington, as the distressing mother, and Wallace Berry, as the bibulous runner-outer from matrimony, with that admirable actress, Aline MacMahon, complete the principals of a cast that it would be extremely difficult to surpass.

Frank Albertson, Mickey Rooney, Cecelia Parker and Bonita Granville are among the others who lend this picture a worth that quite justifies its continuance on a mid-city screen—beginning yesterday at Loew's Columbia.

The bill is completed by the usual array of short-reel subjects, including the newsreel, comedy and cartoon that form the habitual auxiliaries of any important cinema program.

Columbians

"UNCLE VANYA." The Columbia Players present the drama in three acts and four scenes, translated from the Russian of Anton Chekhov and adapted by Rose Caylor. Directed by Aurora Poston. Stage setting arranged by Jane Lasater Rubey. Costumes by Maria Howard. At Pierce Hall January 15 and 16. Reviewed Wednesday evening by W. A. Whitney.

Identical with the distinguished production of last March, the Columbia Players last evening repeated their performance of Anton Chekhov's "Uncle Vanya," achieving no less a dramatic triumph than was theirs earlier.

Wade Robinson, as the retired professor; Eileen Fowler, as his second wife; Dorothea Lewis, as daughter, and Wayne Bobst, as Uncle Vanya, were again successful in drawing from this drama of frustration all the inherent tragedy.

The doctor, perhaps the most nearly sane of them all, was played by Arthur Westover. Dorothy M. White, as Vanya's mother; Joe Bourne, as an impoverished landowner; Elizabeth Dyer, as the old nurse, and Oliver Anderson, as a workman, turned in convincing performances.

Plays Queen to the Three Kids

That distinguished and venerable actress whose labors in the theater have spanned more than half a century has another of her vibrantly appealing roles in "Three Kids and a Queen," the Universal production that took possession of the Belasco screen yesterday. This grande dame of the playhouse, of course, would be May Robson, who has a peculiar faculty for imbuing her impersonations with both charm and a raucous sort of power that leave an indelible impression. "Three Kids and a Queen" may not be her best picture—remembering "Lady for a Day," for example—but it is expressive and, at times, explosive entertainment. You will like it, one feels sure.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Concert by Ernest Schelling, pianist, and the Musical Art Quartet (Sascha Jacobsen, Paul Bernard, Louis Kievman and Marie Roemaet-Rosanov) in the Mayflower Hotel ballroom Wednesday morning. Program: Quartet in G major for strings (Mozart), Fantasia in G minor (Bach-Liszt), Nocturne a Raguza (Schelling), Spanish Dance (Granados), Legende (Paderewski), Polonaise in A flat (Chopin), last two movements of Quintet in E flat for piano and strings (Schumann).

Because of its fine balance and poise, its dignity and its warm eloquence of tone, the reading of the Mozart G major quartet by the Musical Art Players was the most thoroughly enjoyable part of this concert. Through long association these musicians have attained that consentience in interpretation which results in the impersonal disclosure of music. However important the individuality of an artist may be in certain types of composition, that saliency has no place in the string quartet, which should be a fusion devoid of personal characteristics.

Composed 153 years ago—in December of 1782, to be exact—the G major quartet is the first of the set of six that Mozart dedicated to Josef Haydn. Its obvious seriousness of purpose definitely announces Mozart's entrance into his period of complete maturity. The merely graceful elegancies of his gallant style have been paid aside, and while the surface aspect of the music is as nicely polished as before, its spiritual content is deeper and more significant.

In this work Mozart began to reveal himself, to speak aloud the meditations of his heart, to express his own feelings about the mystery of life. In the slow movement we are conscious of a remarkable exaltation of spirit which raises him to the companionship of the later Beethoven. Were the entire quartet on the same plane with the andante cantabile, it would be a masterpiece of contemplative ecstacy. But the other movements, severely contrapuntal as they are, are lightened with a subtle humor.

Ernest Schelling, in his group of soli, gave the impression of a romanticist at the keyboard, a twentieth century incarnation, as it were, of the improvisatore. His excellent technique is merely the foundation for airy edifices of fantasy, and the compositions which he played, including his own effective nocturne, were of the imaginative variety. His tendency toward the bravura style was given full rein in the Chopin polonaise, which was made as thunderous as though he had been competing with an orchestral tutti.

This dynamic vigor, better controlled, stood him in good stead in the two movements from the Schumann quintet. In this work, the piano is meant to dominate over its gentler-voiced associates, carrying them along in its impetuous course. It is a case of a family of viols accompanying a masterful piano on a joyours adventure into the ralm of poesy.

Taxes on Land Here Obsolete, Hazen Declares

High Levies of District Colonial Relic, Says Commissioner.

District Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, speaking before the Southwest Citizens Association at the Fourth Precinct last night, assailed high land taxes in the District, saying that they hailed from colonial days when land was the only taxable commodity and should now be obsolete.

The Commissioner quoted tax statistics in which he showed that 80 per cent of the District's revenue was derived from land and real property taxes. He said that he had long been an advocate of higher gasoline taxes and diversion of these into a general fund.

Commissioner Hazen also assailed the condition of the Municipal and Juvenile Court buildings, saying that they were a disgrace to the Capital city. He said that he is planning to foster a bill to sell the District Building, using the proceeds to erect a Municipal Building opposite the courthouse.

The association went on record as indorsing the proposal of the corporation counsel to have a magistrate court system in the precincts for trivial cases, which cause overcrowding of the Police Court docket. Indorsement of the Board of Education and deprecation of the action taken by the Federation of Citizens Associations in asking a Congressional investigation of the teaching of communism in the public schools also were voted.

New Courts Backed

Proposals for establishment of a system of magistrates' courts in Washington were indorsed last night by the Dahlgren Citizens Association in Crosby Noyes School.

The organization passed resolutions urging construction of one or more of the new Government buildings in the Northeast. Members indicated they particularly hoped to have their section chosen for the new War Department Building.

Efforts were renewed to have an addition built to the Crosby Noyes School and to have an overpass built across the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad tracks in Ninth street northeast.

Referendums Opposed

The Chevy Chase Citizens Association last night adopted a resolution opposing the proposal of Commissioner George E. Allen that District residents be permitted to vote in referendums on questions of District policy.

This action was taken because the referendums would only be used to advise the Commissioners as to the public's wishes and as such would not be in conformity with our system of fiovernment," it was said at the meeting.

A resolution introduced by a special committee, expressing the confidence of the association in the Board of Education and school officials in the selection of school texts and urging the repeal of the "communism rider" was withdrawn by the committee without action being taken.

Edwin S. Hege was elected president. Others named were Lewis Radcliffe, and John R. Manning vice presidents; George E. Diffenbach, secretary-treasurer, and Hege and Arthur Adelman, delegates to the Federation.

Dyers Will Hear Of Social Security

Social security, sales promotion and merchandising will be discussed today by 850 convention delegates of the National Association of Dyers and Cleaners. Their twenty-ninth annual meeting, at the Wardman Park Hotel, will be ended this afternoon with election of officers.

Yesterday's sessions were devoted to technical subjects. Speakers were Walter H. Franks, George G. Gaubatz, jr., D. S. Keogh, J. Marshall, I. J. Fairchild, Lloyd Peck and Katharine Fisher. A fashion show climaxed the program.

This morning the delegates, who represent most of the States and several foreign countries, will hear R. S. Smethurst, assistant counsel of the National Association of Manufacturers, on the Federal social security act; William A. Hart, advertising director for E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., on sales promotion and merchandising, and G. Earl Smith, president of Bornot, Inc., on merchandising dry cleaning service.

Gen. Fries to Attack Communism Teaching

A joint meeting Saturday night to hear Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries, two members of Congress and an American Legion official assail the teaching of communism in public schools was announced yesterday by the Junior O. U. A. M. and the Daughters of America. It will be held in the Juniors' auditorium, 2407 Minnesota avenue southeast, beginning at 8 p. m.

Scheduled to speak, besides Gen. Fries, are E. Brooke Fetty, vice commander of the Maryland Department, American Legion; Representative Virginia E. Jenckes (Democrat), of Indiana, and Representative Martin Dies, of Texas.

Newspaper Ads Build Business, Delegates Told

Col. Herron Declares They Are Valuable Because of News Content.

Many business houses "have built their success on newspaper advertising," Col. Leroy W. Herron, advertising manager of the Evening Star, told the Direct Mail Advertising Association convention yesterday in the Raleigh Hotel.

Newspaper advertisements, he said, have great value because they constitute a form of news and are printed side by side with news about what people accomplish from their birth until their death.

"All intelligent people," Col. Herron added, "read the newspapers. Over $414,000,000 is spent every year in the purchase of newspapers.

"I've believed in newspaper advertising all my life. I've worked on newspapers 40 years and I still believe their columns afford the best advertising medium in the world."

The advantages of radio advertising were extolled by A. D. Willard, of Station WJSV. He said $3,000,000,000 was spent on radio advertising over a 11-year period, including $85,000,000 in 1935.

David R. Porterfield, merchandise director of the United Typography of America, described direct-mail advertising as second in volume to newspaper advertising.

Jesse T. Roberts, of Atlanta, president of the Direct Mail Advertising Association, also spoke.

Association Names 3 Group Heads

Ford Young, of the Fusselli-Young Ice Cream Co., was re-elected chairman of the ice cream manufacturers division of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association for the eighth consecutive term.

Jerome Saks, of the Saks Fur Co., was elected chairman of the furriers group of the association, succeeding Dewey Zirkin, who had headed the group for eight years.

Joseph B. Murphy, of the Standard Coal Co., was re-elected chairman of the coal division of the association for the fourth consecutive term.

Hollywood

By Sidney Skolsky

Movie Boners.

Hollywood, Jan. 15.

THE most popular movie boner is in the flicker, "Captain Blood," for many have written in about it. Carl Andrews, among the many, refers to that sequence in which Flynn sails into the harbor and starts to give battle to the two French ships. Flynn's boat goes between the two French boats and then opens fire upon one of them. The big movie battle is on, and while Flynn and his crew bombard this French ship, the other French warship doesn't fire a shot. It merely stands there until Flynn vanquishes the boat in battle and then it starts to fight. And that's how a navy fights in the movies.

In "I Dream Too Much," Lily Pons has taken Henry Fonda's operetta and is producing it as a musical comedy. Fonda is in jail in France, and after getting out, he takes a plane to England and hurries to the theater.

When Fonda gets to the theater, claims Leon Malenczak, he doesn't get a ticket, but merely walks into the theater and no one stops him. "I had to buy a ticket," says Leon, "to see him do it."

• • • •

Carl Brisson, in "Ship Cafe," is being outfitted at the cabaret to become the bouncer. In trying on the clothes, writes Herman Samuels, Brisson is dismayed to see that his jacket sleeves are too short. When he emerges from the dressing room, however, the jacket is large and the sleeves are of correct length. Probably the producer used to be a tailor.

• • • •

Shirley Temple in "The Littlest Rebel" goes to visit her father, who is in jail in the Yankee sector. Shirley insists Alex Kaporofsky, leaves the house without a hat and arrives at the jail wearing one. Directors always treat Shirley nice, and if she wanted a hat it was hers for the asking.

In the flicker, "Remember Last Night," Edward Arnold, Robert Young and Constance Cummings are seen at a party, writes Len Jackel, at which they have come without any clothes, save those that they are wearing. The censors probably insisted on that. The next morning, continues Jackel, Robert Young is seen with an entirely new outfit. He had worn a tuxedo the night before. It must be very nice to go to a friend's house and find your clothes there waiting for you.

The characters in "Seven Keys to Baldpate" are in a summer hotel in the winter, the electricity has been turned off and they use candles. Yet a phone call is made from the hotel switchboard, and Philip Varga says that he was always of the opinion that it was necessary to have electricity to run a switchboard.

George Raft and Joan Bennett are seen walking in a park in "She Couldn't Take It," and it is evident from their conversation that it is Central Park. Yet in the lake in this park, writes Ben Hughes, there are motorboats, and you know there aren't motorboats in the Central Park lakes.

• • • •

Warner Baxter, in the flicker, "King of Burlesque," tells Jack Oakie to go out and buy a "sparkler" for him to give to his girl friend. Oakie returns with the ring and, writes Theresa Cox, it is a perfect fit for the gal's third finger. Isn't it a little odd that Oakie would know the exact size of the ring when he hardly knew the girl, and Warner Baxter had made no mention of the size.

In "Freckles," claims T. Mario, when Mr. Carter entered the shack where the gangsters were hiding, one of the gangsters locked the door. When Mr. Carter came in the second time the gangster forgot to lock the door. Were they expecting Virginia Wiedler to walk in the door, for it is odd that they left the door open when the story called for Virginia's entrance and closed the door when it wasn't necessary for Virginia Wiedler to get into the room.

• • • •

Wasn't it convenient for Dick Powell, asks John Linder, to be wearing full-length trousers for that pants-dropping scene in "Page Miss Glory," when he wore military riding breeches all through the flicker with the exception of this scene.

Broadway

By Ed Sullivan

Manhattan Promenade.

New York, Jan. 15.

DAYBREAK on Broadway, with a group of us stay-uplaters lying amiably to each other in Dave's Blue Room . . . The shifting, swirling tide of the Stem passes in and out, and a sharp, chill breeze sneaks through the door every time it's opened . . . The Ritz Brothers are huddled at one table, discussing new bits of "business" they'll introduce at their Palladium opening on the morrow . . . A detective is recalling his toughest pinch . . . He captured three murderers in the Turkish bath of a Brooklyn hotel, waiting for them night after night, after a tip from one of their enemies . . . "There I was, completely naked, with my gun tied around my belly with a piece of string," he says . . . "But luckily, they were naked, too" . . . It must have been a bizarre picture with patches of steamy fog at times hiding the three killers, who stood their hands pointing ceilingward . . . But he brought them in, won a citation . . . Outside, the Stem is coming sleepily to life . . . "Good business tonight," says Dave . . . A drunk weaves his way to the door, opens it, looks owlishly at mild-faced Dave . . . "Shut up!" roars the drunk and staggers off.

At the Paradise, hours earlier, I sit with Headwaiter Albert Berryman and Jack Adler as the waiters pile the tables . . . This to me always is the most striking moment in the cabaret circuit, for now the night club settles down to slumber . . . Berryman is a veteran of the Dawn Patrol . . . He was the headwaiter at the Frivolity the night Sherry Pelham, a chorine, threatened to kiss Col. Charles Lindbergh . . . "Lindy said 'no' and he meant it," recalled Berryman . . . "When he started to leave, I didn't try to stop him. He's not the kind of a guy you want to get in front of when he's angry" . . . The Berrymans are one of the First Families of the Stem . . . His brother, George, was headwaiter at the famous Silver Slipper, but now he's Albert's assistant . . .

The mothers of Broadway would make a good magazine story, if you had time to sit down and write it . . . Clifton Webb's mother, for instance, is never far from his side, advising, commanding, guarding his health . . . He's no longer a youngster, but Mabel treats him as though he were in his 'teens . . . She's turned down hundreds of night club jobs offered to him, on the grounds that doubling from a show to a supper club would be too strenuous . . . Eleanor Powell's mother, always backstage at the Winter Garden, occasionally breaks in her dancing shoes for her . . . Helen Morgan's ma is her closest pal . . . She worked hard when Helen was a tot, and the Morgan gal has more than repaid her in affection . . . Gracie Barrie's mother is always with the stunning little 'Scandals" songster . . . Eddie Davis, of Leon and Eddie's, was puzzled by a woman who sat night after night in a car outside of the club . . . He investigated finally, learned that it was the mother of Ray and Grace MacDonald, two youngsters who do a collegiate dance number for him . . . Tiny, bespectacled mother of the Frazee Sisters waits for them nightly at the Hollywood Restaurant . . . Milton Berle's mother, Cheery, bespectacled, ample-bosomed, is never more than one laugh from his side . . . She has helped him immeasurably, for she gave him confidence, which is the first thing the robber barons of Broadway try to steal away from a youngster . . .

But sometimes mothers die, and then the fathers appear on the Broadway scene . . . Jack Pearl's father is generally with the Baron Munchausen, his courtly manners pleasing the girls no end . . . Almost as tiny and fragile is the father of the Ritz Brothers, who stands in the wings and smiles the most astounding smile I've ever seen . . . Jack Benny's dad believes that the sun rises and sets on the former Waukegan, Ill., lad . . . Benny's father is a great race track fan . . . But he never bets actual cash . . . At the end of the month, he totals his wins or losses, and either is cheered or depressed by the money he would have won or lost—if he had bet. . . . Gertrude Niesen's dad accompanies his talented youngster wherever she goes, arguing about lights or her position on a bill, sometimes wrong in his enthusiasm, but always battling for her. . . . George Gershwin's father was quite a character, but not so sturdy as the father of Max Baer. . . . A few hours after Max's fight with Joe Louis, his dad picked him up bodily and threatened to throw him out of the hotel window—because he had disgraced the family.

Right to Jaw Is Retzlaff's Only Hope

Bomber Predicts Quick Knockout in Bout Tomorrow.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Jan. 15.—Glove-laden dynamite that laid Primo Carnera, King Levinsky, Max Baer, and Paulino Uzcudun low is ready for Charley Retzlaff, the raw-boned rancher from North Dakota.

Joe Louis, most murderous puncher since the days of Jack Dempsey, said so today, after he finished boxing for his battle with Retzlaff set for 15 rounds or less in the Chicago Stadium Friday night.

The Brown Bomber with the "dead pan" stare predicted that Retzlaff would go the same way as Carnera, Baer and the others.

Why Fool Around.

"I am ready for Retzlaff," Louis said. "I will be in there to give my best. The quicker I score a knockout the better I will like it. What's the use of fooling. I want to get it over as fast as I can."

Louis breezed through seven rounds of boxing today, the last workout with the gloves he will have. His workout was not particularly impressive, but he was suspected of easing up. Wearing a headgear and with his broad shoulders and face glistening under a heavy coating of grease, Louis opened up with two rounds with Tiger Henderson, Hartford, Conn., Negro. The Bomber was mainly on the defensive attempting to block Henderson's left hooks to the head and body.

He boxed two more rounds with a Negro named Ed Wills, winding up with a spirited one-round session with Johnny Milan. Milan, fast and shiftly, traded punches with Louis and remained upright to the end. Milan's speed afoot made Louis miss repeatedly. Louis made his most savage showing against Wills, whom he dropped twice with right smashes to the jaw.

Retzlaff, referred to as the condemned man, sharpened up his right-hand punches in a three-round boxing drill, stepping the first with Art Oliver and two with Johnny Brown. Retzlaff appeared to be in excellent physical condition, but missed frequently in boxing. He realizes that his big chance is to bring his dangerous right, if nothing else, into the ring, and for first time may produce the thrill of seeing the Brown Bomber at least hurt or in distress.

To Weigh in Friday.

"They can pick Louis to win," the big farmer drawled, "but I'll show them that he can be hit and hurt. Down in my heart I know I have what can beat him—a right to the jaw."

Louis and Retzlaff will weigh in at noon Friday in a gymnasium instead of at the Illinois State Athletic Commission offices which were regarded as too cramped to accommodate the crowd. The switching of the time from the usual 2 o'clock weighing in was agreed upon by the managers of the two boxers.

The advance sale, according to reports tonight, had reached $50,000.

Alexandria Skeet Club Is Organized

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Alexandria, Va., Jan. 15.—Alexandria's first skeet club was organized last night in the auditorium of the Virginia Public Service.

Dr. Samuel B. Moore was elected president; Joseph S. Everly, secretary-treasurer, and Earl Hunt Roberts, field captain. A special committee headed by Herbert Knight, local sportsman, and Henry T. Moncure, principal of George Washington High School, was also appointed to inspect several sites offered for the skeet club's approval.

The Columbia Firemen play the Acacia Insurance basketeers Friday night in the Armory Hall at 8:30. The Acacia team is composed of former George Washington and V. P. I. stars.

Montgomery County Teams in Five Games

Revised schedules among the Montgomery County schools find five games on tap today and tomorrow, with the Rockville-Montgomery Blair clash tomorrow the leading attraction.

Bethesda, visiting the Maryland Freshman at College Park; Gaithersburg at St. Johns, and the Rockville five entertaining St. Albans are all carded at 3:30 p. m. today.

U. S. Hockeyists Lose.

London, Jan. 15 (AP).—The United States Olympic hockey team received its second defeat since arriving in England, when it fell before Earls Court All-Stars, one of London's semipro league teams, 3 to 1 today. John C. Lax, of Boston, scored for the Americans early in the first period.

Inspector Suspended In N. Y. Ring Hearing

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—Louie Beck, chief inspector for the New York State Athletic Commission, was suspended today pending a hearing on charges that he associated with the gambling element in New York fight clubs.

The charges, hurled at the commission yesterday by Nat Fleischer, editor of The Ring, a boxing magazine, will be sifted at a meeting Friday. The commission will hear Fleischer's witnesses and Beck, then announce its decision.

In suspending the inspector, Chairman John J. Phelan said Fleischer had accused Beck of using his official connection to peer over the shoulders of boxing judges, thus gaining knowledge as to how the bouts were being scored, "then joining a group of gamblers in the rear of the club, passing on the information and participating in the betting."

Commissioner Bill Brown declared the commission would oust Beck if Fleischer's charges were proved.

Fleischer said he began an investigation of Beck at the request of readers of his magazine. Several months later, after satisfying himself that Beck was giving information to gamblers, Fleischer said he so notified Brown and asked that Chairman Phelan be advised.

Phelan said he checked the report, but found nothing to substantiate the charges.

Fleischer said a recent investigation indicated Beck had abandoned the practice.

"Mr. Fleischer says he has witnesses, and we have asked him to bring them here Friday," Phelan said. "Mr. Beck also will be heard. I do not care to discuss the matter until then."

Fleischer, who said he had asked Gen. Phelan to speak to Beck in a fatherly way and thus avoid publicity that would do the boxing game no good virtually was forced to name his man by Commissioner Bill Brown.

"You put this commission under a cloud with your radio speech and we mean to go through with it," said Brown. "You started it and we mean to have it finished. Who was the man?"

Fleischer then named Beck.

Dusek and Cox To Entertain Tonight

Meet on Mat at Turner's Arena; Delton Faces Judson in Semifinal.

By George Considine.

THE regular weekly meeting of the Snicker and Snarl Society will hold forth tonight at the Turner Arena. Old business to be disposed of involves one Kansas City Joe Cox, Ernie Dusek, of the royal family of rassle, will do the disposing, according to present plans.

When one thinks of a Dusek, one naturally thinks of the Cradle Split, that goshawful looking grip made popular by Rudy Dusek. But being an artist in his own right and therefore unwilling to shine in the reflected glory of his famous brother, Ernie avoids the Split and concentrates on the modern flying tackle.

Dusek's Record Cited.

It was mainly through his proficiency in the flying tackle that earnest Ernest skyrocketed to the top. In addition to his three recent draws with Champion Danno O'Mahony, he has outgrunted Chief Little Wolfe, George Zaharias, Jim McMillan, Gino Garibaldi, Nick Lutze, Man Mountain Dean and two guys named Joe.

Kansas City (Old Business) Cox has worked here so often this season that he is said to be demanding one of those flashy usher uniforms. Given a top-spot assignment two weeks ago, he established precedent by knocking Jumping Joe Savoldi out of the ring, and last Thursday he accompanied Dean Detton in the usual climactic excursion through the ropes. The experts look forward with keen interest to tonight's variation.

Detton vs. Judson.

In the scheduled 45-minute semifinal, the aforementioned Dean Detton, former University of Utah wrestling captain, has been chartered to muscle around with Frank Judson, the old wrist-locksmith. Judson will be remembered locally for his draw with Ray Steele and his two great stands against Jim Londos two years ago.

Taking care of the prelims, Ivan (the Terrible) Managoff has a none-too-social engagement with Hans Steinke, and Hairbreath Harry Kent grimaces in the general direction of one Irving Coffield.

W. & L. Is No Match For Episcopal High

Alexandria, Va., Jan. 15.—Episcopal High School defeated the basketball team from Washington and Lee High School here today, 30 to 19.

Washington and Lee lacked scoring ability from the outset. Time and again the Arlington County boys worked the ball near the basket for an easy shot, failing to register most of the time. Capt. Johnny Evers, Ray Wheeler and Bill Rice led their team in scoring.

Tough W. Md. Five Subdued By Cards

Invaders Show Surprising Form But Lose by 44 to 33 Score.

A SURPRISINGLY strong Western Maryland team, far more powerful and dangerous than when it succumbed to Georgetown earlier in the season, lost a grueling battle to Catholic University's Flying Cardinals last night by a score of 44-33.

It was a riotous battle of color, good and bad basketball that some 1,500 fans saw, and it took all the home team had to stave off the determined thrusts of their guests as the game pushed into the closing minutes. But the Cards had what it takes, Hermie Schmarr, who takes a lot of shots and makes most of them.

Schmarr was Catholic's outstanding performer, whipping the cords with a spray of shots that netted 18 points, but he had a bitter rival in Stan Benjamin, Western Maryland's pleasant-faced center, who matched Schmarr's tally with 18 points for his mates. But it was a slightly better brand of team play, not individual brilliance, that won for "Fod" Cotton's crew.

Lieb on Bench.

With Capt. Bernie Lieb, regular center, sitting on the bench as the game opened, Catholic assumed a 6-0 lead with Zeke Brown leading the attack. But this advantage melted under the hot fire of the Terrors, and it was not only necessary to call Lieb into action but for the Cards to exert themselves to the utmost to right their wobbly selves.

Benjamin staked his team to another lead as the final half opened, sinking two baskets in rapid succession, but this was short-lived, as Schmarr, Carroll and Brown came through with buckets. But the Terrors staged a counter-attack that pared Catholic's lead to 27-24, before Lieb sank his first shot of the fracas to steady the home club's drive.

Pitt to Tackle Georgetown Tomorrow

ITS domination of the Eastern Conference threatened for the first time since the league's organization, the University of Pittsburgh courtmen invade Washington tomorrow night intent on starting a comeback at Georgetown's expense. The two meet on the Tech High School court at 8:30 o'clock.

Outstanding for the Panthers is Ted Roderick, brilliant forward, who is the key man in the attack. Oddly enough Roderick was virtually shut out in the Carnegie Tech game, a league battle, which the Plaid won in one of the season's upsets. The rest of the team is comprised largely of sophomores.

Miles Zalesnick, Bob Johnson and Ed Spotovich are second year men in the line-up. Pete Noon, 6 foot 5 inch center, is a senior. Georgetown well remembers Noon for his play two years ago when he replaced injured Claire Cribbs at the pivot position and scored 18 points to defeat the Hoyas almost single-handedly.

'Discoverer' of Helen To Resign Tennis Post

San Francisco, Jan. 15 (AP).—C. W. "Pop" Fuller, veteran tennis coach and "discoverer" of Helen Wills Moody, announced today he would resign as vice president of the Northern California Tennis Association at the annual meeting Saturday.

"Let the younger members handle the association affairs," said Fuller, who has been active in the association for more than 12 years.

By coincidence, his most famous pupil will step into an executive position as he steps out.—Mrs. Moody, it was learned, will be elected a director.

Matches Rained Out.

Tampa, Fla., Jan. 15 (AP).—Entrants in the annual Dixie tennis tournament forfeited all matches today to Jupiter Pluvius. Heavy rain began before dawn and it was announced that play set for today would be attempted tomorrow.

Reds in Black, Players Get Raises

Cincinnati Ends Sixth but Club Makes Money as Night Games Aid.

By the Associated Press.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 15.—Most of the Cincinnati Reds will get pay boosts this year.

With the club "out of the red" for the first time in four years and more, semi-official sources disclosed today that 32 players have been offered contracts calling for more pay than they got in 1935.

The club roster is expected to number approximately 40 players when spring training begins.

Only Two Ask Raises.

Though only Paul Derringer, ace pitcher last season, has been officially disclosed as signed, it was indicated that many more have agreed to the terms offered, and that only two regulars—identities undisclosed — have asked more money.

With Larry MacPhail, generalissimo of the club, maintaining official silence on the ground that contract matters are club-player business, it was understood that the Reds were liberal in bestowing raises on the youngsters added under a rejuvenation plan.

The increases followed disclosure that the club, according to President Powel Crosley, "finished in the black" in 1935, as well as in sixth place, with attendance at the seven night games sufficient to pay for the $50,000 lighting system the club installed.

Grimm Is Relieved Of Ridiculed Title

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Jan. 15.—Charlie Grimm, manager of the pennant-winning Chicago Cubs, today was relieved of his executive job as vice president of the club.

The stockholders, at their annual meeting, directed that the title was embarrassing to Grimm because of the facetious attitude of sports writers in referring to it. The stockholders emphasized that Grimm was the sole boss of the ball club and would have more authority than he had last year.

President Philip K. Wrigley and other officers were re-elected.

Richard Girls Win.

Mushky Jackson Is Barred As Joe Louis' Announcer

By Jack Diamond.

CHICAGO, Jan. 15.—On and off the level . . . short soundings from the Lake Michigan sports front . . . there's an "if" as big as the Empire State Building in Charley Retzlaff's promise that he'll only fight two more bouts "if" he beats Joe Louis . . . Billy Caxton suggests he ought to change his monicker from Retzlaff to "Let's Laff."

Jay Berwanger, all-America's all-American, is thumping the midway cinder paths to condition himself for a try at an Olympic decathlon berth . . . and speaking of berths, Bill Tilden lies awake all night in his, eating up detective thrillers . . . He's rated the best contract player in tennis circles . . . Mike Jacobs won't let his aide de camp, Mushky Jackson, do the announcing at the workouts any more, after he introduced Louis one afternoon as the "Brown Barber" . . . by the stop watch (people think of the goofiest things!) it took 31 minutes for Trainer Jack Blackburn to tenderly wrap the bandages around Joe's valuable mitts.

Ernie Nevers, Tiny Thornhill's assistant at Stanford and one of Palo Alto's all-time grid greats, has been visiting here, reported on the brink of a coaching job . . . "We should have beaten S. M. U. worse in the Rose Bowl, but we couldn't get our boys to pass," said the big blond Viking . . . Well, they had their hands full smearing up the Mustang aerial circus . . . Ernie rates Bones Hamilton as the most valuable player on the Indian squad.

The good-luck ring J. Louis makes so much fuss about is a $2.50 silver affair with a monk's head on it . . . Blackburn is the only other person he'll let wear it . . . and that's only when Joe is in the ring.

The Chicago Cubs will have a two-base spring training layout . . . they'll commute, with one training base at Catalina Island, of course, and another at Tampa . . . The National League champions will have to look after their own uniforms when on the road . . . suit rolls have been ordered for every member of the team.

Doc Kearns is here with his Knight of the Bath, Hank, who was allowed to fight in California, prohibited from fighting in New York, and now is scheduled to battle here unless something else happens . . . The good doctor comes up with an answer to that hitherto unanswerable question . . . "Why, Louis wouldn't have lasted three rounds with Dempsey when the champ was at his best," says Doc. "Dempsey in those days would have punched a fellow like Louis silly while he was shuffin' around looking for an opening" . . . So there you are.

With Shirley Povich

COLLEGE boxing may have its character-building qualities, as the coaches say, but the sport also has its seamy side, which Lieut. Jack Harmony, Maryland U. coach, apparently has been the first to note.

Lieut. Harmony puts it bluntly. College boxing can't go on in its present methods. Somebody is going to get killed or permanently maimed and shuddering faculties, backed by popular opinion, will abolish the sport, Harmony predicts.

Bouts that wouldn't be tolerated by any boxing commission that superintends the professional phase of the game are staged between college fighters with the full okay of the respective institutions, according to Harmony. He points out that the grossest mismatch between two fighters is entirely possible among the colleges, while the same kind of a match would be laughed off and forbidden instantly by professional matchmakers and boxing commissions.

POVICH.

In college boxing, as a matter of fact, there is no such item as matching fighters. It is all in the luck of the draw. If one college happens to boast a truly great welterweight, for example, and the opposing team has the rankest sort of a welterweight among its starting line-up, the latter is tossed into the battle willy-nilly, armed only with sheer courage and the will to win for alma mater. The result might well be tragic.

HARMONY points out that college boxing is still in its infancy. Rarely does one or two boxers on a college team boast any fighting experience beyond what he has learned in college. Sometimes the colleges acquire lads who have made their marks in amateur ranks, but the pulk of the line-up is drawn from raw kids who, beyond the fancy that they are fighters, possess little of the knowledge of self-defense.

But with boxing rapidly becoming a major sport and colleges alive to its revenue-producing powers, college boxing coaches are not far behind college football coaches in acquiring experienced material. The lads who have won A. A. U. titles or Golden Gloves championships are rapidly finding their way onto college boxing teams as the result of inducements offered.

When these types of college boxers encounter the raw college kid it results in modified slaughter. The referee may be quick to halt a bout when a lad is in distress, but one punch can produce punch-drunkenness, medical science tells us. And with their college spirit raging, the young tyros are eager for the battle no matter who their opponent may be. Their very courage induces severe punishment.

Rare are the instances where college teams are coached by men who have been in the ring and have professional experience, with the ability to impart it to their pupils. Usually the college boxers are in the hands of an alumnus who has won some small fame in amateur rings. The same colleges that would shudder at the thought of sending their football team out on the field improperly coached are, in their apparent ignorance, willing to entrust the good health of their boxers to veritable novices who boast coaching titles. Some day, somebody is going to crack down on college boxing.

—In Short—

This department will wager that a team of preliminary fighters culled from Washington's fistic colony can whip any college team in the Southern Conference which is supposed to be red-hot in college boxing . . . Harvard, which expends hundreds of thousands yearly to offer its athletes the best facilities, entrusts the good health of its boxing team to Henry Lamar, who was never better than a fifth-flight heavyweight in professional ranks . . . if college bouts are dull, blame it on the coaches who ask only that their fighters win . . . In contrast to the professional fighters who must fight to please the crowd or risk future purses . . . the District Boxing Commission this year for the first time has demanded that two of its judges aid the referee in rendering decisions on all college bouts . . . for some reason college boxing rules do not require the contestants to shake hands at the start of the final round in contrast to professional rules . . . and matching the colleges' no-cheering rule in absurdity is the rule that referees must not count out loud while tolling the seconds over a knocked-down fighter.

Look Out 'Alabama!' Brewers Shift Attack

The Heurich Brewers today prepared a new attack for their basketball game Sunday with Alabama Pitts and his All Stars.

They realize that if they want to defeat the All Stars they must produce at better offensive game than they have had. Last Sunday, against the Pittsburgh Willigs, the Brewers were unable to penetrate the vsitors' defense and were forced to stand helplessly by and see their foes pull away from them.

Riordan School's Five To Play Eastern Here

Washington's only annual intersectional high school sports event resumes Saturday when the basketball team of Riordan School, of Highland, N. Y., sends its basketball team against Eastern High at the Eastern gymnasium.

The game will be played at 10 a. m., followed by moving pictures at 11 a. m. and luncheon at noon.

Table Tennis Champ In Exhibition Saturday

Elias Schuman, recently crowned Baltimore-Washington intercity table tennis champion, will give an exhibition at 2 p. m., Saturday, in the sporting goods department of Woodward & Lothrop's. The champion will be assisted by Ray Sherfy, intercity runnerup; Larry Sherfy and Ken Lafferty, fourth and fifth ranking local players, respectively.

The exhibition is the second of a series of three, which is being sponsored by the District of Columbia Table Tennis Association in order to stimulate interest in the American Zone Championships to be held in the Tech High School gym January 30, January 31 and February 1.

Committee Investigates Wisconsin Controversy

4,000 Watch Rejuvenated Terrapins

System Fails but Sure Eyes of Players Bring Victory.

Middies Show Excellent Defense, Lack Punch Near the End.

By Lewis F. Atchison.
A Staff Correspondent.

ANNAPOLIS, Jan. 15.—Shaking off the jinx that has hobbled their efforts against Navy in recent years, an ambitious and energetic Maryland basketball team soundly thrashed the Middies, 32 to 20, before some 4,000 fans in a fast game this afternoon.

It was a vastly different meeting between the teams than previous games have been, not only because Maryland eventually won, but because the Terps abandoned their ancient and decrepit zone-defense for a more effective man-for-man style of play. Moreover their familiar long-pass from one end of the court to Vic Willis was used but sparingly and with a high degree of success.

Navy's new wooden floor, made of the same material as Tech High School's playing court, also helped considerably. Past battles were waged on a hard concrete surface.

Borries Missed.

Navy undoubtedly missed "Buz" Borries, the whipsaw of last year's quintet, but it is doubtful if Borries could have saved the Middies from defeat this afternoon. Maryland made its shots count when points were needed, and that's all that is necessary to win in basketball.

The Terrapins set plays were absolutely useless against Navy's plaster-tight defense. Some worked but the vast majority failed and it was the natural basketball ability of the respective players that pulled the fat out of the fire for Coach Burt Shipley.

Maryland got off to a 6-3 lead in the early minutes of play, but Mickey McFarland, dead-eye Navy forward, personally brought the Tars from behind and gave them a 7-6 lead with two pretty buckets. McFarland, incidentally, was the only Middy to score from the floor in the first half and the high scorer of the game with 11 points.

But this advantage was short-lived when Charley Keller sank a free try and Vic Willis followed up with a snowbird on a pass from Waters. Lynch dropped in a foul for Navy and Waters followed suit for Maryland. Field goals by Waters and McFarland completed the scoring for the first half and Maryland boasted a slim 12-10 lead at the intermission.

Tie Score Again.

Navy started well in the final half as Lynch took a pass from Shamer under the bucket and sank the shot to tie it up again at 12-all, but when Knocky Thomas came through with two fouls and Willis popped in a short field goal Maryland went ahead for keeps.

The Crabtown cagers continued to menace the Old Liners until, with the score 18-16, Willis made his third field goal. Fellows, who later was ejected from the fray via the personal foul route, made good on a charity throw, and Navy was through for the afternoon. Wheeler, Waters, Willis and Buscher scored successively for the Terps, prodding the score to 30 before they relented, and they were just coasting at the final whistle.

Ernie Nevers Linked With Lafayette Post

Palo Alto, Calif., Jan. 15 (AP).—Ernie Nevers, assistant football coach of Stanford University, sped East by train today, presumably to Easton, Pa., giving rise to speculatoin whether the former all-America fullback was in line for the head coaching berth at Lafayette College.

It was learned his railroad ticket called for a stopover at Easton, home of Lafayette.

Leaders Run Outside in Stretch

By Walter Haight,
A Staff Correspondent.

TROPICAL PARK, Miami, Jan. 15.—Racing luck, that important phase of the turf game that cannot be found in study of the charts or breeding books, played an important role in the running of the Oleander Purse, closing day's feature at this track. The purse went to Brandon Prince, trained and owned by W. Waterman, as the result of an incident as the field entered the stretch.

A moment before Brandon Prince appeared to be headed for only a minor part, if any, of the pay-off. Blessed Again and One Chance seemed destined to battle it out for first money. But that was before something happened and the something was the fact that the tiring pace-setter, Unencumbered, staggered in the direction of the outside fence and in doing so carried One Chance and Blessed Again wide.

Had Saved Ground.

This shuffle was all that Brandon Prince needed. While he had been running last he had been saving ground along the rail and when Unencumbered opened a "gate," Jockey F. Madeley was alert to the opportunity. The ancient Axenstein gelding suddenly was transformed from poor fifth to an impressive first.

When they regained direction, One Chance and the favored Blessed Again set out after Brandon Prince, but their efforts and those of Jockeys Stout and Meade were sufficient only to add a thrill to battle for second money. Brandon Prince's scattered backers collected $11.20.

The race was marked by a spectacular, but not damaging, added thrill. Soon after the start, Foreign Legion was caught between horses and Jockey F. Kopel suddenly imitated the man on the flying trapeze, minus the proper equipment. Fortunately, the boy landed clear of the pounding hoofs, slid for some 10 yards and then came to his feet in the same motion. And the sighs of relief than turned to the usual bedlam that marks the running of any horse race.

St. John's Conquers Mount Rainier, 35-27

In spite of the absence of its stars, Jim MacGregor and Leo Baldwin, the Mount Rainier High basketball team offered serious opposition to St. John's before bowing by a score of 35 to 27 yesterday in the Mount Rainier gym. High-scoring honors went to Bill Counselman, of the visitors, with 16 points, while the host team's Tillmon Scott piled up 14.

Hialeah Opens Amid Scene Of Beauty

Widener's Dress Rehearsal Is Prelude to 46-Day Meeting.

By a Staff Correspondent.

TROPICAL PARK, Miami, Jan. 15.—There are no gates to open at the Nation's "dream race track," but tomorrow Hialeah Park starts what racing officials believe will be the most successful turf meeting ever held in this State. Amid a scene of beauty that man can create only in a tropical clime, the big business of matching the speed of horses and buying cashing tickets will be conducted for the next 46 racing days.

Joseph E. Widener, president of the Miami Jockey Club, staged a dress rehearsal today for his staff, and at the conclusion allowed that the show would go on forever had not the Florida Racing Commission placed a limit on the run.

A month of racing at Tropical Park, 9 miles away, has served to whet the appetites of those among the winter vacationists who were not already acquainted with the horses. Some 12,000 are expected to disturb the flamingoes.

While in some spots Hialeah's opening program smacks of Tropical Park, it also offers an imposing feature race in the Inaugural Handicap. A $3,500 added sprint over the 6-furlong course. Although 20 of the best horses now enjoying the tropical sun were named overnight, only 14 are likely to start.

Edward F. Seagram's Stand Pat, despite top weight of 126 pounds promises to be the favorite. Among others he meets Hal Price Headley's Whopper, C. V. Whitney's High Glee, Mrs. Charles Bromley's Brannon and Mrs. Emil Denemark's Top Dog and Nectarine.

The day will mark the first turf (grass course) racing of the year. A field of fair platers will add the English touch to the program.

2 Duckpin Titles At Stake This Week

Two of the Capital's most richly prized duckpin titles will be put up for competition on Saturday, the Howard Campbell Sweepstakes, confined to male bowlers of this city, and the ladies' Dixie tournament, open to all members of the fair sex.

The Campbell stakes enter their ninth year this season and call for a total of 15 games to be rolled in three successive weeks. The first block is scheduled for the Lucky Strike alleys. Eddie Espey, of the Convention Hall alleys, is the defending champion, winning the title over a field of the city's foremost stars with a total pinfall of 1,967.

The Dixie event, expected to attract close to 50 of the Nation's ranking duckpinners, also consists of 15 games, but unlike the Campbell, it will be completed in one day. The first block will be rolled at Silver Spring at noon, the second at the Arcadia at 3 and the final block at Rosslyn at 8 p. m. Ida Simmons, the Nation's No. 1 ranking bowler, of Norfolk, Va., is the defending champion.

A preliminary for the Ladies' Dixie Sweepstakes will be held tonight at the Arcadia alleys, following the bowling in the Ladies' Federal League.

Right to Jaw Is Retzlaff's Only Hope

Bomber Predicts Quick Knockout in Bout Tomorrow.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Jan. 15.—Glove-laden dynamite that laid Primo Carnera, King Levinsky, Max Baer, and Paulino Uzcudun low is ready for Charley Retzlaff, the raw-boned rancher from North Dakota.

Joe Louis, most murderous puncher since the days of Jack Dempsey, said so today, after he finished boxing for his battle with Retzlaff set for 15 rounds or less in the Chicago Stadium Friday night.

The Brown Bomber with the "dead pan" stare predicted that Retzlaff would go the same way as Carnera, Baer and the others.

Why Fool Around.

"I am ready for Retzlaff," Louis said. "I will be in there to give my best. The quicker I score a knock-out the better I will like it. What's the use of fooling. I want to get it over as fast as I can."

Louis breezed through seven rounds of boxing today, the last workout with the gloves he will have. His workout was not particularly impressive, but he was suspected of easing up. Wearing a headgear and with his broad shoulders and face glistening under a heavy coating of grease, Louis opened up with two rounds with Tiger Henderson, Hartford, Conn., Negro. The Bomber was mainly on the defensive attempting to block Henderson's left hooks to the head and body.

He boxed two more rounds with a Negro named Ed Wills, winding up with a spirited one-round session with Johnny Milan. Milan, fast and shiftly, traded punches with Louis and remained upright to the end. Milan's speed afoot made Louis miss repeatedly. Louis made his most savage showing against Wills, whom he dropped twice with right smashes to the jaw.

Retzlaff, referred to as the condemned man, sharpened up his right-hand punches in a three-round boxing drill, stepping the first with Art Oliver and two with Johnny Brown. Retzlaff appeared to be in excellent physical condition, but missed frequently in boxing. He realizes that his big chance is to bring his dangerous right, if nothing else, into the ring, and for first time may produce the thrill of seeing the Brown Bomber at least hurt or in distress.

To Weigh in Friday.

"They can pick Louis to win," the big farmer drawled, "but I'll show them that he can be hit and hurt. Down in my heart I know I have what can beat him—a right to the jaw."

Louis and Retzlaff will weigh in at noon Friday in a gymnasium instead of at the Illinois State Athletic Commission offices which were regarded as too cramped to accommodate the crowd. The switching of the time from the usual 2 o'clock weighing in was agreed upon by the managers of the two boxers.

The advance sale, according to reports tonight, had reached $50,000.

Alexandria Skeet Club Is Organized

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Alexandria, Va., Jan. 15.—Alexandria's first skeet club was organized last night in the auditorium of the Virginia Public Service.

Dr. Samuel B. Moore was elected president; Joseph S. Everly, secretary-treasurer, and Earl Hunt Roberts, field captain. A special committee headed by Herbert Knight, local sportsman, and Henry T. Moncure, principal of George Washington High School, was also appointed to inspect several sites offered for the skeet club's approval.

The Sparrow Juniors opened the second annual junior basketball series here today with a 19-to-11 victory over The Washington Post team. Bill Grover was leading scorer of the game with 10 points.

The Columbia Firemen play the Acacia Insurance basketeers Friday night in the Armory Hall at 8:30. The Acacia team is composed of former George Washington and V. P. I. stars.

Montgomery County Teams in Five Games

Revised schedules among the Montgomery County schools find five games on tap today and tomorrow, with the Rockville-Montgomery Blair clash tomorrow the leading attraction.

Bethesda, visiting the Maryland Freshman at College Park; Gaithersburg at St. Johns, and the Rockville five entertaining St. Albans are all carded at 3:30 p. m. today.

U. S. Hockeyists Lose.

Inspector Suspended In N. Y. Ring Hearing

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—Louie Beck, chief inspector for the New York State Athletic Commission, was suspended today pending a hearing on charges that he associated with the gambling element in New York fight clubs.

The charges, hurled at the commission yesterday by Nat Fleischer, editor of The Ring, a boxing magazine, will be sifted at a meeting Friday. The commission will hear Fleischer's witnesses and Beck, then announce its decision.

In suspending the inspector, Chairman John J. Phelan said Fleischer had accused Beck of using his official connection to peer over the shoulders of boxing judges, thus gaining knowledge as to how the bouts were being scored, "then joining a group of gamblers in the rear of the club, passing on the information and participating in the betting."

Commissioner Bill Brown declared the commission would oust Beck if Fleischer's charges were proved.

Fleischer said he began an investigation of Beck at the request of readers of his magazine. Several months later, after satisfying himself that Beck was giving information to gamblers, Fleischer said he so notified Brown and asked that Chairman Phelan be advised.

Phelan Non-committal.

Phelan said he checked the report, but found nothing to substantiate the charges.

Fleischer said a recent investigation indicated Beck had abandoned the practice.

"Mr. Fleischer says he has witnesses, and we have asked him to bring them here Friday," Phelan said. "Mr. Beck also will be heard. I do not care to discuss the matter until then."

Fleischer, who said he had asked Gen. Phelan to speak to Beck in a fatherly way and thus avoid publicity that would do the boxing game no good virtually was forced to name his man by Commissioner Bill Brown.

"You put this commission under a cloud with your radio speech and we mean to go through with it," said Brown. "You started it and we mean to have it finished. Who was the man?"

Fleischer then named Beck.

Dusek and Cox To Entertain Tonight

Meet on Mat at Turner's Arena; Delton Faces Judson in Semifinal.

By George Considine.

THE regular weekly meeting of the Snicker and Snarl Society will hold forth tonight at the Turner Arena. Old business to be disposed of involves one Kansas City Joe Cox, Ernie Dusek, of the royal family of rassle, will do the disposing, according to present plans.

When one thinks of a Dusek, one naturally thinks of the Cradle Split, that goshawful looking grip made popular by Rudy Dusek. But being an artist in his own right and therefore unwilling to shine in the reflected glory of his famous brother, Ernie avoids the Split and concentrates on the modern flying tackle.

Dusek's Record Cited.

It was mainly through his proficiency in the flying tackle that earnest Ernest skyrocketed to the top. In addition to his three recent draws with Champion Danno O'Mahony, he has outgrunted Chief Little Wolfe, George Zaharias, Jim McMillan, Gino Garibaldi, Nick Lutze, Man Mountain Dean and two guys named Joe.

Kansas City (Old Business) Cox has worked here so often this season that he is said to be demanding one of those flashy usher uniforms. Given a top-spot assignment two weeks ago, he established precedent by knocking Jumping Joe Savoldi out of the ring, and last Thursday he accompanied Dean Detton in the usual climactic excursion through the ropes. The experts look forward with keen interest to tonight's variation.

Detton vs. Judson.

In the scheduled 45-minute semi-final, the aforementioned Dean Detton, former University of Utah wrestling captain, has been chartered to muscle around with Frank Judson, the old wrist-locksmith. Judson will be remembered locally for his draw with Ray Steele and his two great stands against Jim Londos two years ago.

Taking care of the prelims, Ivan (the Terrible) Managoff has a none-too-social engagement with Hans Steinke, and Hairbreath Harry Kent grimaces in the general direction of one Irving Coffield.

W. & L. Is No Match For Episcopal High

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Alexandria, Va., Jan. 15.—Episcopal High School defeated the basketball team from Washington and Lee High School here today, 30 to 19.

Washington and Lee lacked scoring ability from the outset. Time and again the Arlington County boys worked the ball near the basket for an easy shot, failing to register most of the time. Capt. Johnny Evers, Ray Wheeler and Bill Rice led their team in scoring.

Tough W. Md. Five Subdued By Cards

Invaders Show Surprising Form But Lose by 44 to 33 Score.

A SURPRISINGLY strong Western Maryland team, far more powerful and dangerous than when it succumbed to Georgetown earlier in the season, lost a grueling battle to Catholic University's Flying Cardinals last night by a score of 44-33.

It was a riotous battle of color, good and bad basketball that some 1,500 fans saw, and it took all the home team had to stave off the determined thrusts of their guests as the game pushed into the closing minutes. But the Cards had what it takes, Hermie Schmarr, who takes a lot of shots and makes most of them.

Schmarr was Catholic's outstanding performer, whipping the cords with a spray of shots that netted 18 points, but he had a bitter rival in Stan Benjamin, Western Maryland's pleasant-faced center, who matched Schmarr's tally with 18 points for his mates. But it was a slightly better brand of team play, not individual brilliance, that won for "Fod" Cotton's crew.

Lieb on Bench.

With Capt. Bernie Lieb, regular center, sitting on the bench as the game opened, Catholic assumed a 6-0 lead with Zeke Brown leading the attack. But this advantage melted under the hot fire of the Terrors, and it was not only necessary to call Lieb into action but for the Cards to exert themselves to the utmost to right their wobbly selves.

They finally got back at the head of the procession and were leading at the half, 16-14.

Benjamin staked his team to another lead as the final half opened, sinking two baskets in rapid succession, but this was short-lived, as Schmarr, Carroll and Brown came through with buckets. But the Terrors staged a counter-attack that pared Catholic's lead to 27-24, before Lieb sank his first shot of the fracas to steady the home club's drive.

Pitt to Tackle Georgetown Tomorrow

ITS domination of the Eastern Conference threatened for the first time since the league's organization, the University of Pittsburgh courtmen invade Washington tomorrow night intent on starting a comeback at Georgetown's expense. The two meet on the Tech High School court at 8:30 o'clock.

Outstanding for the Panthers is Ted Roderick, brilliant forward, who is the key man in the attack. Oddly enough Roderick was virtually shut out in the Carnegie Tech game, a league battle, which the Plaid won in one of the season's upsets. The rest of the team is comprised largely of sophomores.

Miles Zalesnick, Bob Johnson and Ed Spotovich are second year men in the line-up. Pete Noon, 6 foot 5 inch center, is a senior. Georgetown well remembers Noon for his play two years ago when he replaced injured Claire Cribbs at the pivot position and scored 18 points to defeat the Hoyas almost single-handedly.

'Discoverer' of Helen To Resign Tennis Post

San Francisco, Jan. 15 (AP).—C. W. "Pop" Fuller, veteran tennis coach and "discoverer" of Helen Wills Moody, announced today he would resign as vice president of the Northern California Tennis Association at the annual meeting Saturday.

"Let the younger members handle the association affairs," said Fuller, who has been active in the association for more than 12 years.

By coincidence, his most famous pupil will step into an executive position as he steps out. Mrs. Moody, it was learned, will be elected a director.

Matches Rained Out.

Tampa, Fla., Jan. 15 (AP).—Entrants in the annual Dixie tennis tournament forfeited all matches today to Jupiter Pluvius. Heavy rain began before dawn and it was announced that play set for today would be attempted tomorrow.

Reds in Black, Players Get Raises

Cincinnati Ends Sixth but Club Makes Money as Night Games Aid.

By the Associated Press.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 15.—Most of the Cincinnati Reds will get pay boosts this year.

With the club "out of the red" for the first time in four years and more, semi-official sources disclosed today that 32 players have been offered contracts calling for more pay than they got in 1935.

The club roster is expected to number approximately 40 players when spring training begins.

Only Two Ask Raises.

Though only Paul Derringer, ace pitcher last season, has been officially disclosed as signed, it was indicated that many more have agreed to the terms offered, and that only two regulars—identities undisclosed — have asked more money.

With Larry MacPhail, generalissimo of the club, maintaining official silence on the ground that contract matters are club-player business, it was understood that the Reds were liberal in bestowing raises on the youngsters added under a rejuvenation plan.

The increases followed disclosure that the club, according to President Powel Crosley, "finished in the black" in 1935, as well as in sixth place, with attendance at the seven night games sufficient to pay for the $50,000 lighting system the club installed.

Grimm Is Relieved Of Ridiculed Title

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Jan. 15.—Charlie Grimm, manager of the pennant-winning Chicago Cubs, today was relieved of his executive job as vice president of the club.

The stockholders, at their annual meeting, directed that the title was embarrassing to Grimm because of the facetious attitude of sports writers in referring to it. The stockholders emphasized that Grimm was the sole boss of the ball club and would have more authority than he had last year.

President Philip K. Wrigley and other officers were re-elected.

Richard Girls Win.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich

COLLEGE boxing may have its character-building qualities, as the coaches say, but the sport also has its seamy side, which Lieut. Jack Harmony, Maryland U. coach, apparently has been the first to note.

Lieut. Harmony puts it bluntly. College boxing can't go on in its present methods. Somebody is going to get killed or permanently maimed and shuddering faculties, backed by popular opinion, will abolish the sport, Harmony predicts.

Bouts that wouldn't be tolerated by any boxing commission that superintends the professional phase of the game are staged between college fighters with the full okay of the respective institutions, according to Harmony. He points out that the grossest mismatch between two fighters is entirely possible among the colleges, while the same kind of a match would be laughed off and forbidden instantly by professional matchmakers and boxing commissions.

POVICH.

In college boxing, as a matter of fact, there is no such item as matching fighters. It is all in the luck of the draw. If one college happens to boast a truly great welterweight, for example, and the opposing team has the rankest sort of a welterweight among its starting line-up, the latter is tossed into the battle willy-nilly, armed only with sheer courage and the will to win for alma mater. The result might well be tragic.

HARMONY points out that college boxing is still in its infancy. Rarely does one or two boxers on a college team boast any fighting experience beyond what he has learned in college. Sometimes the colleges acquire lads who have made their marks in amateur ranks, but the pulk of the line-up is drawn from raw kids who, beyond the fancy that they are fighters, possess little of the knowledge of self-defense.

But with boxing rapidly becoming a major sport and colleges alive to its revenue-producing powers, college boxing coaches are not far behind college football coaches in acquiring experienced material. The lads who have won A. A. U. titles or Golden Gloves championships are rapidly finding their way onto college boxing teams as the result of inducements offered.

When these types of college boxers encounter the raw college kid it results in modified slaughter. The referee may be quick to halt a bout when a lad is in distress, but one punch can produce punch-drunkenness, medical science tells us. And with their college spirit raging, the young tyros are eager for the battle no matter who their opponent may be. Their very courage induces severe punishment.

Rare are the instances where college teams are coached by men who have been in the ring and have professional experience, with the ability to impart it to their pupils. Usually the college boxers are in the hands of an alumnus who has won some small fame in amateur rings. The same colleges that would shudder at the thought of sending their football team out on the field improperly coached are, in their apparent ignorance, willing to entrust the good health of their boxers to veritable novices who boast coaching titles. Some day, somebody is going to crack down on college boxing.

In Short—

This department will wager that a team of preliminary fighters culled from Washington's fistic colony can whip any college team in the Southern Conference which is supposed to be red-hot in college boxing . . . Harvard, which expends hundreds of thousands yearly to offer its athletes the best facilities, entrusts the good health of its boxing team to Henry Lamar, who was never better than a fifth-flight heavyweight in professional ranks . . . if college bouts are dull, blame it on the coaches who ask only that their fighters win . . . in contrast to the professional fighters who must fight to please the crowd or risk future purses . . . the District Boxing Commission this year for the first time has demanded that two of its judges aid the referee in rendering decisions on all college bouts . . . for some reason college boxing rules do not require the contestants to shake hands at the start of the final round in contrast to professional rules . . . and matching the colleges' no-cheering rule in absurdity is the rule that referees must not count out loud while tolling the seconds over a knocked-down fighter.

Mushky Jackson Is Barred As Joe Louis' Announcer

By Jack Diamond.

CHICAGO, Jan. 15.—On and off the level . . . short soundings from the Lake Michigan sports front . . . there's an "if" as big as the Empire State Building in Charley Retzlaff's promise that he'll only fight two more bouts "if" he beats Joe Louis . . . Billy Caxton suggests he ought to change his moniker from Retzlaff to "Let's Laff."

Jay Berwanger, all-America's all-American, is thumping the midway cinder paths to condition himself for a try at an Olympic decathlon berth . . . and speaking of berths, Bill Tilden lies awake all night in his, eating up detective thrillers . . . He's rated the best contract player in tennis circles . . . Mike Jacobs won't let his aide de camp, Mushky Jackson, do the announcing at the workouts any more, after he introduced Louis one afternoon as the "Brown Barber" . . . by the stop watch (people think of the goofiest things!) it took 31 minutes for Trainer Jack Blackburn to tenderly wrap the bandages around Joe's valuable mitts.

Ernie Nevers, Tiny Thornhill's assistant at Stanford and one of Palo Alto's all-time grid greats, has been visiting here, reported on the brink of a coaching job . . . "We should have beaten S. M. U. worse in the Rose Bowl, but we couldn't get our boys to pass," said the big blond Viking . . . Well, they had their hands full smearing up the Mustang aerial circus . . . Ernie rates Bones Hamilton as the most valuable player on the Indian squad.

The good-luck ring J. Louis makes so much fuss about is a $2.50 silver affair with a monk's head on it . . . Blackburn is the only other person he'll let wear it . . . and that's only when Joe is in the ring.

The Chicago Cubs will have a two-base spring training layout . . . they'll commute, with one training base at Catalina Island, of course, and another at Tampa . . . The National League champions will have to look after their own uniforms when on the road . . . suit rolls have been ordered for every member of the team.

Doc Kearns is here with his Knight of the Bath, Hank, who was allowed to fight in California, prohibited from fighting in New York, and now is scheduled to battle here unless something else happens . . . The good doctor comes up with an answer to that hitherto unanswerable question . . . "Why, Louis wouldn't have lasted three rounds with Dempsey when the champ was at his best," says Doc. "Dempsey in those days would have punched a fellow like Louis silly while he was shuffin' around looking for an opening" . . . So there you are.

Look Out 'Alabama!' Brewers Shift Attack

The Heurich Brewers today prepared a new attack for their basketball game Sunday with Alabama Pitts and his All Stars.

They realize that if they want to defeat the All Stars they must produce at better offensive game than they have had. Last Sunday, against the Pittsburgh Willigs, the Brewers were unable to penetrate the visitors' defense and were forced to stand helplessly by and see their foes pull away from them.

Riordan School's Five To Play Eastern Here

Washington's only annual intersectional high school sports event resumes Saturday when the basketball team of Riordan School, of Highland, N. Y., sends its basketball team against Eastern High at the Eastern gymnasium.

The game will be played at 10 a. m., followed by moving pictures at 11 a. m. and luncheon at noon.

Table Tennis Champ In Exhibition Saturday

Elias Schuman, recently crowned Baltimore-Washington intercity table tennis champion, will give an exhibition at 2 p. m., Saturday, in the sporting goods department of Woodward & Lothrop's. The champion will be assisted by Ray Sherfy, intercity runnerup; Larry Sherfy and Ken Lafferty, fourth and fifth ranking local players, respectively.

The exhibition is the second of a series of three, which is being sponsored by the District of Columbia Table Tennis Association in order to stimulate interest in the American Zone Championships to be held in the Tech High School gym January 30, January 31 and February 1.

4,000 Watch Rejuvenated Terrapins

System Fails but Sure Eyes of Players Bring Victory.

Middies Show Excellent Defense, Lack Punch Near the End.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

A Staff Correspondent.

ANNAPOLIS, Jan. 15.—Shaking off the jinx that has hobbled their efforts against Navy in recent years, an ambitious and energetic Maryland basketball team soundly thrashed the Middies, 32 to 20, before some 4,000 fans in a fast game this afternoon.

It was a vastly different meeting between the teams than previous games have been, not only because Maryland eventually won, but because the Terps abandoned their ancient and decrepit zone-defense for a more effective man-for-man style of play. Moreover their familiar long-pass from one end of the court to Vic Willis was used but sparingly and with a high degree of success.

Navy's new wooden floor, made of the same material as Tech High School's playing court, also helped considerably. Past battles were waged on a hard concrete surface.

Borries Missed.

Navy undoubtedly missed "Buz" Borries, the whipsaw of last year's quintet, but it is doubtful if Borries could have saved the Middies from defeat this afternoon. Maryland made its shots count when points were needed, and that's all that is necessary to win in basketball.

The Terrapins set plays were absolutely useless against Navy's plaster-tight defense. Some worked but the vast majority failed and it was the natural basketball ability of the respective players that pulled the fat out of the fire for Coach Burt Shipley.

Maryland got off to a 6-3 lead in the early minutes of play, but Mickey McFarland, dead-eye Navy forward, personnally brought the Tars from behind and gave them a 7-6 lead with two pretty buckets. McFarland, incidentally, was the only Middy to score from the floor in the first half and the high scorer of the game with 10 points.

But this advantage was short-lived when Charley Keller sank a free try and Vic Willis followed up with a snowbird on a pass from Waters. Lynch dropped in a foul for Navy and Waters followed suit for Maryland. Field goals by Waters and McFarland completed the scoring for the first half and Maryland boasted a slim 12-10 lead at the intermission.

Tie Score Again.

Navy started well in the final half as Lynch took a pass from Shamer under the bucket and sank the shot to tie it up again at 12-all, but when Knocky Thomas came through with two fouls and Willis popped in a short field goal Maryland went ahead for keeps.

The Crabtown cagers continued to menace the Old Liners until, with the score 18-16, Willis made his third field goal. Fellows, who later was ejected from the fray via the personal foul route, made good on a charity throw, and Navy was through for the afternoon. Wheeler, Waters, Willis and Buscher scored successively for the Terps, prodding the score to 30 before they relented, and they were just coasting at the final whistle.

In the men's division the junior national 300-yard medley relay championship heads the bill, supported by 100 and 220 yard free-style races and the high dive.

Women entrants will participate in the 50 and 220 yard free-style, and the 100-yard breaststroke.

Ernie Nevers Linked With Lafayette Post

Palo Alto, Calif., Jan. 15 (AP).—Ernie Nevers, assistant football coach of Stanford University, sped East by train today, presumably to Easton, Pa., giving rise to speculation whether the former all-America fullback was in line for the head coaching berth at Lafayette College.

It was learned his railroad ticket called for a stopover at Easton, home of Lafayette.

By Walter Haight,
A Staff Correspondent.

TROPICAL PARK, Miami, Jan. 15.—Racing luck, that important phase of the turf game that cannot be found in study of the charts or breeding books, played an important role in the running of the Oleander Purse, closing day's feature at this track. The purse went to Brandon Prince, trained and owned by W. Waterman, as the result of an incident as the field entered the stretch.

A moment before Brandon Prince appeared to be headed for only a minor part, if any, of the pay-off. Blessed Again and One Chance seemed destined to battle it out for first money. But that was before something happened and the something was the fact that the tiring pace-setter, Unencumbered, staggered in the direction of the outside fence and in doing so carried One Chance and Blessed Again wide.

Had Saved Ground.

This shuffle was all that Brandon Prince needed. While he had been running last he had been saying ground along the rail and when Unencumbered opened a "gate," Jockey F. Madeley was alert to the opportunity. The ancient Axenstein gelding suddenly was transformed from poor fifth to an impressive first.

When they regained direction, One Chance and the favored Blessed Again set out after Brandon Prince, but their efforts and those of Jockeys Stout and Meade were sufficient only to add a thrill to battle for second money. Brandon Prince's scattered backers collected $11.20.

The race was marked by a spectacular, but not damaging, added thrill. Soon after the start, Foreign Legion was caught between horses and Jockey F. Kopel suddenly imitated the man on the flying trapeze, minus the proper equipment. Fortunately, the boy landed clear of the pounding hoofs, slid for some 10 yards and then came to his feet in the same motion. And the sighs of relief than turned to the usual bedlam that marks the running of any horse race.

St. John's Conquers Mount Rainier, 35-27

In spite of the absence of its stars, Jim MacGregor and Leo Baldwin, the Mount Rainier High basketball team offered serious opposition to St. John's before bowing by a score of 35 to 27 yesterday in the Mount Rainier gym. High-scoring honors went to Bill Counselman, of the visitors, with 16 points, while the host team's Tillmon Scott piled up 14.

Hialeah Opens Amid Scene Of Beauty

Widener's Dress Rehearsal Is Prelude to 46-Day Meeting.

By a Staff Correspondent.

TROPICAL PARK, Miami, Jan. 15.—There are no gates to open at the Nation's "dream race track," but tomorrow Hialeah Park starts what racing officials believe will be the most successful turf meeting ever held in this State. Amid a scene of beauty that man can create only in a tropical clime, the big business of matching the speed of horses and buying cashing tickets will be conducted for the next 46 racing days.

Joseph E. Widener, president of the Miami Jockey Club, staged a dress rehearsal today for his staff, and at the conclusion allowed that the show would go on forever had not the Florida Racing Commission placed a limit on the run.

A month of racing at Tropical Park, 9 miles away, has served to whet the appetites of those among the winter vacationists who were not already acquainted with the horses. Some 12,000 are expected to disturb the flamingoes.

While in some spots Hialeah's opening program smacks of Tropical Park, it also offers an imposing feature race in the Inaugural Handicap. A $3,500 added sprint over the 6-furlong course. Although 20 of the best horses now enjoying the tropical sun were named overnight, only 14 are likely to start.

Edward F. Seagram's Stand Pat, despite top weight of 126 pounds promises to be the favorite. Among others he meets Hal Price Headley's Whopper, C. V. Whitney's High Glee, Mrs. Charles Bromley's Brannon and Mrs. Emil Denemark's Top Dog and Nectarine.

The day will mark the first turf (grass course) racing of the year. A field of fair platers will add the English touch to the program.

Rising Demand For Rails Aids Steel Industry

Otherwise the Outlook Is Obscured by Mixed Trends.

New York, Jan. 15.—Mixed trends obscure the outlook in the iron and steel market, says Iron Age in its weekly summary today. The review adds: "Negative factors include uncertainty as to the course of automobile production, business hesitancy growing out of the AAA decision and a drop of 10 points to 60 per cent in tin plate output. Reassuring factors embrace a rise in orders for rails and other heavy rolled products, an increase in steel purchases by farm equipment makers and an advance in the Iron Age scrap price index from $13.33 to $13.42 a ton, putting it on a parity with the high for 1935, reached early in December.

"Conflicting tendencies also are to be noted in steel works operations, though the national ingot rate remains unchanged at 51 per cent of capacity. Output is down two points to 37 per cent at Pittsburgh, five points to 40 per cent at Buffalo, and two points to 55 per cent at St. Louis, but has risen two points to 52 per cent at Chicago, three points to 65 per cent in the valleys and four points to 42 per cent in the South. The Philadelphia district remains at 39 per cent, the Cleveland-Lorain area at 61 per cent, the Wheeling district at 72 per cent, the southern Ohio River region at 82 per cent and Detroit at 35 per cent.

"Orders from three roads for rails and track supplies total 62,589 tons. The Southern Pacific bought 40,769 tons of rails and 10,000 tons of accessories, the Illinois Central closed for 7,600 tons of rails, and the Southern Railway System, which purchased 10,000 tons of rails last November, placed supplementary orders for 3,000 tons of rails and 1,200 tons of tie plates and other accessories. The New York Central is expected momentarily to issue a formal inquiry for 35,000 tons of rails, and the Chicago & North Western, the Milwaukee Road and the Rock Island are preparing estimates of their requirements."

New York, Jan. 15.—On the basis of available data, it is estimated by the Standard Statistics Co., of New York, that approximately $130,000,000 par value of public utility bond issues will mature in 1936 representing the smallest total of ten years.

Contrasted wit hthe past year, when many maturing issues were extended, either voluntarily or through reorganization proceedings, virtually all maturities in 1936 are likely to be met without difficulty.

Warburg Finds U.S.Democracy On the Wane

Hints People Are Vassal Subjects of Arbitrary Federal Rule.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Jan. 15.—James P. Warburg, banker and former economic adviser to the Roosevelt Administration, said today that the status of constitutional democracy in the United States "has become extremely doubtful" since March, 1933.

In a speech before the Association of Commerce, the former vice chairman of the Bank of the Manhattan Co., renewed his criticism of President Rosevelt, and said the world-wide trend toward dictatorships in Government since the war was the result of broken political promises and failure of citizens to exercise the right to govern themselves.

"I have been outspoken in my criticism of the present Administration," he said, "and it is certainly not my purpose here to retract one word of what I have said. But—— "If this Administration has brought us to the brink of relinquishing our right of self-government and becoming vassal subjects of all arbitrary Federal authority——

"If this Administration has interfered with the economic life of our country to an unwarranted degree——

"Utopian Dreams."

"If this Administration has played havoc with our currency, dishonored, our national promises, and spent the people's money heedlessly and wastefully in pursuit of a strange mixture of Utopian dreams and cynically practical partisan purposes——

"If all these things are true, they are true partly because Mr. Roosevelt repudiated his pre-election promises, but even more because we have failed to exercise diligently that fundamental right to govern ourselves which is the essence of America."

He said he did not believe that the President could be re-elected "as the champion of the Democratic principle," but "must stand for a continuance of the world-wide trend away from democracy toward dictatorships—in the next election."

"If he is elected," he went on, "it seems inevitable that the trend will continue further—just how far no one can tell. If he is defeated * * * then it is quite possible that the tide will turn throughout the world."

Bank of Netherlands Cuts Rate to 3 Per Cent

Amsterdam, Jan. 15 (AP).—The Netherlands Bank rate was reduced today from 3½ to 3 per cent.

The reduction was the fifth since a 6 per cent rate was imposed last September. It reflected easier money conditions and a return of funds to The Netherlands.

Oil Shares Make Demonstration of Strength Against Heavy Volume of Profit-Taking.

New York, Jan. 15.—Stocks moved in swirls, but the current was strongly defined in some groups, and with a much heavier turnover, the last hour profit taking brought net losses on the day. Volume of 3,674,800 shares was the second largest of the year. Bonds were firm in general, but the Treasurys were an exception. Grains were dull. May wheat was unchanged at 99⅞ cents a bushel.

Oil shares kept the stock market interesting. Turnover in the group was approximately half a million shares and the best prices in several years were paid for nearly all issues. Low-priced stocks continued to be the most active, some gains amounting to 10 per cent or more, Houston, Superior and Pierce Oil were the leaders in activity. Sugars also were strong. Airplane shares sold off on news of the crash in Arkansas. Douglas fell more than a point.

Specialties had a good day. Radio rose into new high ground on the largest volume in the list. The preferred B shares advanced 3 points. Newport Industries was a fast mover for a time and rose to the best price in two years. Ludlum Steel common and preferred sold into new high ground with climbs of 2 and 12 points, respetcively. Cement stocks hardened. Leathers were buoyant.

Public utilities were mixed. Telephone was narrow, but I. T. T. was strong. Fractionaly irregular prices ruled for tobaccos, stores, steels, rubbers, amusements motors and accessories. Metals and foods weakened. Rails were dull in spite of better traffic reports. Gains of 1 to 5 points were made by American Chain Collins & Aikman, Fuller second preferred, Gillette, Harbison Walker and National Lead.

Trade Improves.

Lacking anything startling in Congress, or statements from Government officials designed to upset or reassure, and the munitions inquiry having drifted into a state of dullness which has openly shocked its senatorial sponsors (who had their hearts set on a big floor show at Government expense), to say nothing of the verdict of not guilty already turned in by the inquiry and signed by its promoter with respect to the bankers concerned, more attention was given the industrial position.

Midweek industrial news was favorable. Railroad car loading last week, as indicated by leading carrier reports, rose 11 per cent over the same week of last year, and the recovery over the holiday week was 13 per cent. Production of electricity continued to climb, the rise last week over last year being 11.2 per cent. Some of the motor companies also are reportnig a heartening increase in business, with a lively market for used cars, and the rise in gasoline prices at least indicates that cars are being used, for there is no shortage in the supply of fuel.

Great uncertainties exist to puzzle the markets, such as the bonus, farm benefits, relief and public works, but the long term outlook remains favorable. That is not indicated by the trade statistics, but is confirmed by the testimony of leaders in business and finance, who nevertheless envisage a much greater and surer recovery were numerous obvious handicaps removed, and were taxation tending to lighten instead of to settle down with smothering weight, even though few new burdens may be added until after election.

Public Buying.

No better proof of public buying could be had than is given by a study of the active stock list. In the Sun's list of the 12 most active stocks, every member for a long time has been a low-priced issue. Yesterday's list, for example, showed that the highest price of any stock of the 12 most active stocks was 21. The most active stock of all—Socony Vacuum—sold at 16, and the average price for the 12 stocks was 11. Apparently the public feels that any stock that has lived through the depression can continue to survive, and the less it costs the greater the chance for speculative profit.

United Fruit.

United Fruit was the second large industrial company to report 1935 earnings, although its statement was merely an estimate. The comptroller estimates net at $10,358,000—subject to verification and audits. That would work out at $3.54 a share. He stated cash and Government securities at $41,308,000, exclusive of a $10,000,000 insurance fund investment. Many of the fourth-quarter reports will have to be figured from the annual statements, by deducting nine months earnings, where already, shown from the year-end figures. That system is a convenience for the companies, but frequently gives the stockholder a bit of annoyance.

Not Downhearted.

"The Chemical Bank, like all other large institutions, is suffering from a lack of demand from sound borrowers. We are not discouraged on this account, for history discloses that since the Napleonic wars money has been in use 80 per cent of the time and out of use 20 per cent of the time. We believe, eventually, money will again be in demand and command a fair return."—Percy H. Johnston, chairman of the Chemical, in annual report to shareholders.

Iterest and Risk.

While the lament of the bankers over the lack of borrowing demand, and the fact that their earnings are declining, look convincing enough to most observers, Chairman Jesse Jones of the RFC is not to be taken in so easily. He restated today his belief that the banks are deliberately withholding credit from needy (and by implication, sound) borrowers, and that interest rates ought to be lower. Although he is charging some railroads—whose credit he doubts—6 per cent, Mr. Jones scolds the banks for not making 5 per cent a maximum rate for all sections of the country for good, bad and indifferent borrowers. Some financial wizards, and they are particularly numerous in Washington, are quite unable to understand (or pretend to be that way) why the premium rises with risk. Mr. Jones ought to know what makes the odds on a horse race, or on a political election, and what determines the price and yield of bonds.

Dividends.

Dividend payments today were the heaviest in a number of years. Stockholders of Western Union had their first taste of profit-sharing money since 1932. Along with their $2-a-share check they were given some figures on the company's depreciation policy and told that since 1930 enough depreciation had been charged to provide for current replacements, but not sufficient "for the future requirements of plant." They were reminded of $41,300,000 of reserves and $99,700,000 of surplus, all invesed in the property. American Telephone shareholders were told that consolidated earnings applicable to Telephone stock were about $7 a share, compared with $5.96 in 1934. Telephone is now reflecting confidence in at least a $7 dividend, and, as earnings improve, the shares doubtless will return to a higher basis to show expectation of a continued $9 rate.

Wheat closed unstable at the same as yesterday's finish to ¾ of a cent lower, May 99¾-⅞, corn ¼ off to ⅛ up, May 60-60¼, oats also ⅛ off to ¼ up, and provisions unchanged to a rise of 5 cents.

Wright Meets Essrick in Semifinal

Former Stable Mate of Furr on Same Card Here Monday.

In determined pursuit of the District welterweight crown now worn by Phil Furr, Cary Wright will attempt to advance a notch or two closer to a title bout in a six-round semi-final to the bout between the 147-pound champion and Steve Halaiko at Turner's arena next Monday night.

Wright's opponent will be George Essrick, a very rugged Baltimorean. Wright formerly was Furr's stable mate, but now is his most persistent challenger. At the time he and Phil worked under the same banner, Wright acquired a string of 24 consecutive wins. Only Ray Bowen, then generally considered the best welterweight hereabouts, had succeeded in scoring over Cary prior to a knockout suffered at the hands of Bob Wilson in 1934.

Following the Wilson knockout, Wright retired to the sidelines for a long rest. Prior to launching his comeback campaign, which has been very successful so far, Cary announced he was returning to the wars for the specific purpose of landing a match with Furr.

In his last start locally, Wright decisively beat Eddie Guera, dealing the promising New Yorker one of the few beatings he has suffered since deserting the amateurs.

THE BUNGLE FAMILY Thinking By Harry J. Tuthill

You sent for me, Mr. El?
Captain Cull, last night while we were questioning Bungle after I was so brutally assaulted, I gave you the map.
Me, sir?
Certainly! While Bungle was telling that absurd yarn about getting the map from some mysterious fellow on deck, I took it out of his hand and handed it to...
Mr. Oakdale got it, sir. He stood right behind me and reached past me as you handed the map toward us.
What! What! Captain, if this is intended as a joke I'll overlook it this once, but...
I beg pardon sir, but as you should know, I'm not the sort to play jokes on an employer, and...
What! You dare to talk back to me at a time like this? Captain Cull, I hereby inform you that you are no longer...but wait. Him...with the map! Leave me for a bit, Captain. I must think.

State Pays $31,053 For Age Pensions

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 15 (AP).—Payments from State funds for old-age pensions in Maryland for the nine months ended December 31 totaled $31,053.97. The majority of the local units had been paying pensions for only a month or two a tthat time, however.

Figures released from the office of State Comptroller William S. Gordy, jr., show that Baltimore City received $15,924.31 of the $31,053.97 for pensions, or a percentage of 51.28. Ten of the 23 counties had received no payments for pensions as of December 31.

The pension funds are from receipts of the 1 per cent gross receipts tax, enacted by the 1935 Legislature for relief and pension payments. Coupled with that tax was the 1 per cent automobile titling tax. Collections from the gross receipts levy during the nine months from Tpril 1 to December 31 totaled $2,836,217.35.

Fairfax Board Accepts Offer On Almshouse

Pultz Bid of $6,800 for Property Is Declared Satisfactory.

FAIRFAX BUREAU OF THE POST.
P. O. Box 245. Fairfax, Va.
Phone Alexandria 43-F-31.

The board of supervisors of Fairfax County, Va., yesterday accepted the offer of F. Baughn Pultz, of Washington, to purchase the old county almshouse for $6,800.

The old almshouse is located on the Little River pike about a mile west of Fairfax. The property consists of 14 acres of land and a large brick house. It was built about 1912 at a cost of approximately $14,000 and was abandoned as a poorhouse about ten years ago. Several counties in northern Virginia combined at that time to erect a district home to care for the poor of these counties. Since that time the property has been offered for sale by the county. Last year the building was used by the District of Columbia Welfare Department as a transient home. The sale of this property must be confirmed by the county circuit court.

At the request of the Herndon Volunteer Fire Department the board voted to appropriate $1,500 from the fire protection fund to assist the fire department in paying for a new fire engine. Commonwealth's Attorney Paul E. Brown was asked for a ruling on the State law in connection with contributions to local fire departments. He held that under the present law the county can contribute to these fire departments equipment necessary for fire protection purposes, but the county cannot turn this money over to the fire department to be spent at the discretion of the department. All equipment and supplies must be obtained from the county on a requisition. He held that it is not necessary under the law for the county to assume the title and liability for the equipment.

The board voted not to accede to the request of the county school board asking that $1,500 be turned over to the school board out of the county dog tax fund. The surplus in the dog tax fund has been in dispute between the two boards since last spring.

The board was notified yesterday that the State fee commission would hold a hearing tomorrow in Richmond on the allowances for the office of county commissioner of revenue and the county treasurer. The State fee commission set the allowances and the supervisors voted several changes. The hearing tomorrow will be on these changes, but the board refused to send a committee to appear before the commission, deciding to stand by its action of reducing the allowances. If the fee commission refuses to agree to the cuts made by the supervisors, the question will then be submitted to the judge of the county circuit court. These allowances are paid two-thirds by the county and one-third by the State.

The board voted to accept the offer of the Federal Government for the distribution of surplus Government food products for needy families in the county. Mrs. Pearl M. Edler, county superintendent of public welfare, was made the agent of the board to take charge of the distribution.

United States Senator Lynn J. Frazier, of North Dakota, told the Chamber of Commerce of Fairfax County, Va., that he believed the future of American farmers is dependent on a lower rate of interest and easier terms of repayment for their farm mortgages.

He explained proposed national legislation which, if made a law, would assure farmers loans at 1½ per cent interest, with a similar amount to be applied to the repayment of the principal, making it possible to retire a loan in about 47 years through the expenditure of but 3 per cent annually.

He said that such a program would be financed through the issuance of farm loan bonds which might be purchased by Federal Reserve banks.

Referring to recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court in respect to emergency legislation, Senator Frazier declared that the judicial branch of the Government now wields too much power.

The immediate need of four additional classrooms for elementary school children at Falls Church was stressed by L. D. Siegfried, principal of the Madison School, at a meeting of the Falls Church Parent-Teacher Association.

He stated that even the temporary rooms provided by partitioning a section of the basement are overcrowded and that every day sees an increase in the school enrollment. Other immediate needs, he said, are the appointment of at least one additional teacher, a shop room for boys a gymnasium for athletics in bad weather and more reference books in every grade.

The association voted to indorse the three point legislative program by the Virginia Education Association, and the secretary was instructed to urge State Senator John W. Rust and Delegate John C. Mackall, of Fairfax County, to support these bills in the State Assembly.

Mr. J. O. Belz was appointed historian of the association. A committee, composed of William Clayton Pryor, chairman; Mrs. Joseph McCaskill and L. D. Siegfried, was appointed to secure educational motion pictures for the school.

An appeal for the donation of a phonograph for use in the course in music appreciation in the school was made, and the association voted to appropriate $10 to purchase records.
